It has come to my attention that this regained popularity in recent weeks. As the author, I'm deeply humbled by the support in the form of reblogs and likes even despite the crass language. I'm not Lakota or from the areas of these tribes. I'm from a Pueblo in New Mexico (shout-out to the Pueblo camp at standing Rock!) And Navajo Nation. I made this post at s tumultuous time in my life when I had accrued so much capital and privilege in the white man's world. Back when these were working links, I was a community organizer that went into a post traumatic stress disorder episode while this post was getting popular 2 years ago when Standing Rock was still at camp. I ask folks to reblog this out of respect to the many people and messages passed that allows for campaigns like these to exist. I'll never know how much was raised but know that y'all were a part of something huge and important. That two years is not a long time and progress is like watching grass grow.

the more i think about mcu spider-man the more i don't like mcu spider-man like mcu twink peter will never have the depth of our friendly neighborhood spider-man. literally any time they try and make spider-man super cool with access to a ton of sick tech and everything i start to really lose interest. the appeal of spider-man to me is that he's like just some guy who happens to have super powers. like you could just hang out with this dude. the "bigger" they make him the more he loses that.

actually i'm gonna elaborate on this further because spider-verse did this but they did it well and with purpose.

the peter from miles' dimension was super over the top, kinda larger than life. as pointed out by peter b. several times. however unlike other times they've done this it wasn't just to try and make spider-man look cool, it was all a part of miles' narrative. miles was given huge shoes to fill and they used this as a tool to portray how small miles felt compared to peter.

but the difference between miles and mcu peter is that miles didn't need any of that to become the spider-man he is today. one of his main role models in the film is peter b. who's broke and off his game, but still manages to do amazing things.

that's the appeal of spider-man. is that anyone can make a difference, no matter where you're at in your life you can still be incredible.

> “I REMEMBER an incident when I [...] had signed up for an evening class taught by Abraham Joshua Heschel... One evening, Professor Heschel entered the classroom and said to us, “Something miraculous just happened as I was walking up Broadway on my way to class.” That got our attention. We listened to hear what that miraculous event might have been. He went on, “Something miraculous happened. The sun set, and of all the people on Broadway, nobody noticed...” Heschel was teaching us that a miracle need not be something extraordinary and inexplicable... The predictable regularity of the world, the fact that sunrise and sunset, the phases of the moon, the change of seasons happen with such precision that they can be anticipated down to the precise minute and never deviate, that is a miracle.”

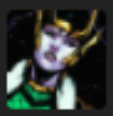
If there was to be a lady Loki in the show or future motives, who would you like to play her? I personally love Katie McGrath. She's got the look.



lucianalight answered:

Apparently there is a Lady Loki but probably she is one the casts. I just hope they don't go with the Loki possess Sif's body plot line.

Anyway, Katie McGrath is a good choice and she's got the looks. But I've always been partial to Eva Green for Lady Loki. I remember after I had watched Thor movies and knew about Lady Loki in comics, when I watched Dark Shadows(directed by Tim Burton) again, I was like wow she would make a great Lady Loki!

She has the looks too and just look at those cheekbones which are similar to Loki's.

Anonymous asked:

Okay, lets talk about the face of the frost giant who grabbed loki's arm, that specific part of the scene actually, like there was a whole battle and the guy just grabs his arm, his armor falling then his skin blue and both are like 👀, even the soldier seemed to be "So... Whata heck?"

lucianalight answered:

Out of the two of them Loki is the one who is more shocked and there is this lost look on his face, full of questions and fear that it's just heartbreaking. He looks at the Jotun to see whether this was sth he intentionally had done. Maybe it's some kind of curse("Am I cursed?"). But he sees the expression on the Jotun's face. Not as shocked as him but still surprised. He didn't expect that Loki's hand turn blue instead of freezing. But also there is sth more in the Jotun's expression. As if he knows sth or realized sth that Loki doesn't which makes Loki panic more and kills him instantly to hide this knowledge from everyone else, Asgardian and Jotun.

This always makes me think about whether the Jotuns were aware of Laufey's bastard son? After all Laufey doesn't try to hide anything from other the Jotuns present when he is talking about it with Loki. What if the headcanon that Loki wasn't left to die is true? What if Jotuns knew about Loki? What that Jotun realized? That Loki is a Jotun? Or maybe he recognized Loki from his small size? There are so many unanswered questions considering Loki and his past.

One of the ballsiest things Tolkien ever did was write 473k words about some hobbits called frodo, sam, merry, and pippin and then write in the appendices that their names are actually maura, ban, kali, and razal.

mirkwoodest Follow

This just in: Eowyn and Eomer's names actually start with the letter "L." [source for other nerds]

#wait so they have hobbitish names and common names?

No, they have Westron names and English names.

What you've got to understand is that everything Tolkien wrote was him pretending to merely translate ancient documents. He was writing as if the Hobbit and The Lord of the Rings were actually been written by Bilbo, Frodo, and Sam (or Bilba, Maura, and Ban) and he was just some random contemporary academic translating it all into English for us.

There are many languages in his books, but generally speaking, everything written in English in the books is a translation of the language "Westron." Therefore any names that come from Westron, he translated. Names coming from other languages, like Sindarin, he left as they were. Why? IDK. Maybe because the stories are from a hobbit perspective and hobbits speak Westron, so he wanted the Westron parts to sound familiar and the other languages/names to remain foreign?

"But Mirkwoodest!" you cry, "The word 'hobbit' isn't an English word! And the names Bilbo Baggins, Frodo Baggins, Samwise Gamgee, Peregrin Took, and Meriadoc Brandybuck" all sounds super weird and not like English at all!"

Psych! They are in English! (Or Old English, German, or Norse.) Once again you underestimate what a nerd Tolkien was. Let me break it down:

In Westron, hobbits are actually called "kuduk," which means "hole-dweller," so for an English translation, Tolkien called them "hobbits" which is a modernization of the Old English word "holbytla" which comes from "Hol" (hole) and "Bytla"(builder).

"Maura" is a Westron name which means "Wise." Weirdly enough, "Frodo" is an actual Proto-Germanic name that actual people used to have and it means the same thing.

"Banazîr" is Westron for "half-wise, or simple." In Proto Germanic, the prefix "Sam" means half, and wise is obviously a word we still use.

“Razanur” means “Traveler” or “Stranger” which is also the meaning of the word “Peregrin(e)” This one is a twofer because “Razar” means “a small red apple” and in English so does “Pippin.”

“Kalimac” apparently is a meaningless name in Westron, but the shortened form “Kali” means “happy,” so Jirt decided his nickname would be “Merry” and chose the really obscure ancient Celtic name “Meriodoc” to match.

Jirt chose to leave “Bilba” almost exactly the same in English, but he changed the ending to an “O” because in Westron names ending in “a” are masculine.

I’m not going to go on and talk about the last names but those all have special meanings too (except Tûk, which is too iconic to change more than the spelling of, apparently).

The Rohirrim were also Westron speakers first and foremost, so their names are also “translations” into Old English and Proto-Germanic words, i.e. “Eowyn” is a combination of “Eoh” (horse) and “Wynn” (joy/bliss).

“Rohirrim/Rohan” are Sindarin words, but in the books, they call themselves the “Éothéod” which is an Old English/Norse combo that means “horse people.” Tolkien tells us in the “Peoples of Middle Earth” that the actual Westron for “Éothéod” is Lohtûr, which means that Eowyn and Eomer’s names, which come from the same root word, must also start with the letter L.

The names of all the elves, dwarves, Dunedain, and men from Gondor are not English translations, since they come from root words other than Westron.

The takeaway from this is that when a guy whose first real job was researching the history and etymology of words of Germanic origin beginning with the letter “W” writes a book, you can expect this kind of tomfoolery.

Notes: Sorry I said "Razal" instead of "Razar" in my original post I'm a fraud.

As you all may know, I am an Asian American, and the rise in anti-Asian hate crimes in the US is tragic and terrifying. A few years ago, my mother and I had unprovoked, racist threats spat at us while we were simply grocery shopping. They didn't care who we were as people- they just reduced us to our race.

I want this space to be positive and encouraging for everyone, and that's not possible unless I make this space clearly anti-racist. I hope this comic is a hopeful reminder that we're all able to make the world a better place together! I can't stop anything alone, but together, we Have I told y'all about my husband's Fork Theory?

If I did already, pretend I didn't, I'm an old.

So the Spoon Theory is a fundamental metaphor used often in the chronic pain/chronic illness communities to explain to non-spoonies why life is harder for them. It's super useful and we use that all the time.

But it has a corollary.

You know the phrase, "Stick a fork in me, I'm done," right?

Well, Fork Theory is that one has a Fork Limit, that is, you can probably cope okay with one fork stuck in you, maybe two or three, but at some point you will lose your shit if one more fork happens.

A fork could range from being hungry or having to pee to getting a new bill or a new diagnosis of illness. There are lots of different sizes of forks, and volume vs. quantity means that the fork limit is not absolute. I might be able to deal with 20 tiny little escargot fork annoyances, such as a hangnail or slightly suboptimal pants, but not even one "you poked my trigger on purpose because you think it's fun to see me melt down" pitchfork.

This is super relevant for neurodivergent folk. Like, you might be able to deal with your feet being cold or a tag, but not both. Hubby describes the situation as "It may seem weird that I just get up and leave the conversation to go to the bathroom, but you just dumped a new financial burden on me and I already had to pee, and going to the bathroom is the fork I can get rid of the fastest."

cipheramnesia Follow

I like this and also I like the low key point that you may be able to cope with bigger forks by finding little ones you can remove quickly. A combination of time, focus, and reduction to small stressors that can allow you to focus on the larger stressor in a constructive way.

sheepscot Follow

does this mean somewhere there is a knife theory?

jenroses Follow

Knives are traumas that require help to fix. Take a fork out and stress is reduced. Take a knife out and you better be prepared to stop the bleeding.

YOU SHOULD REALLY STOP WASTING YOUR TIME LIKE THIS.
DO SOMETHING I AM

NOT WASTING TIME

I DON'T OWN TIME

I
GAIN ANY TIME BY DOING SOMETHING

I USE JUST AS MUCH TIME DOING SOMETHING AS I DO WHILE DOING NOTHING

I AM NOT WASTING TIME
I AM ENJOYING IT

I AM NOT SURE THAT'S HOW IT WORKS

KITTY CAT

I AM SURE YOU SHOULD STOP WASTING YOUR ENERGY ON MY TIME

MANLY MAN

Wasting time.

Aka. I just wanted to draw kitty cat.

ME. I LOVE YOU, BUSTER.
IT'S BOOMER.
MAN, I'M SO GLAD I DIDN'T END UP WITH THE SNAIL ELEMENT.
HE BASICALLY HAS NO CONTROL OVER WHEN HE'LL TURN INTO THIS FORM...
LATELY, HE TENDS TO GET HEADACHES BEFORE MORPHING SO... MAYBE THAT COULD BE A LITTLE WARNING SIGN...?
Leechee DOODLES
AH NEVERMIND. IT WAS PROBABLY JUST ANOTHER DUMB THOUGHT. FORGET IT-
WOOF!

NO YOU LOOK STUPID!
WOOF! WOOF! WOOF!
Leechee DOODLES
OH YA?! WELL YOU LOOK LIKE A COLOSSAL SEWER RAT!
WOOF! WOOF! WOOF! WOOF!
HUH?! I DON'T EVEN HAVE A MOM! THAT INSULT DOESN'T WORK ON ME!
WOOF! WOOF! WOOF!
BOOMER, WHY ARE YOU JUST STANDING THERE LIKE YOU'RE ABOUT TO PASS GAS?
THIS MUTT IS SPEWING ALL SORTS

OF PROFANITIES AT US!
UHHHHHH....
WOOF! WOOF! WOOF!
Leechee DOODLES
I JUST HEAR IT SAYING WOOF.
YOU'RE SO SILLY, MATT.
YOU MORONS! IT'S CLEARLY SPEAKING ENGLISH. IT'S PROBABLY RELATED TO THAT OTHER TALKING DOG IN THIS STUPID CITY.
DO A QUICK WIKI SEARCH AND YOU'LL KNOW WHAT I'M REFERRING TO. HE'S REAL!

Leechee Doodles
I- I'M SERIOUS. IT'S JUST BARKING.
WOOF.
BOTH OF YOU NEED TO GET YOUR EARS CHECKED.
THIS IS WHY I HATE WALKING THROUGH THESE STREETS.
HEADACHES IN EVERY FRIGGIN CORNER...
SHOULD'VE JUST RISKED DROPPING BUTCH WHILE FLYING. IT'S NOT LIKE HE'D DIE. MOST LIKELY.
WAIT A MINUTE...
Leechee Doodles

I THINK I GET IT.
OUR RUTHLESS LEADER GAINED THE ABILITY TO UNDERSTAND ADORABLE LITTLE DOGS. HEHEHE...
Leechee DOODLES
I DID NOT! I'D RATHER SPEND A FULL YEAR WALKING AROUND IN A DAMN CLOWN COSTUME THAN END UP WITH A-BAD DOG!

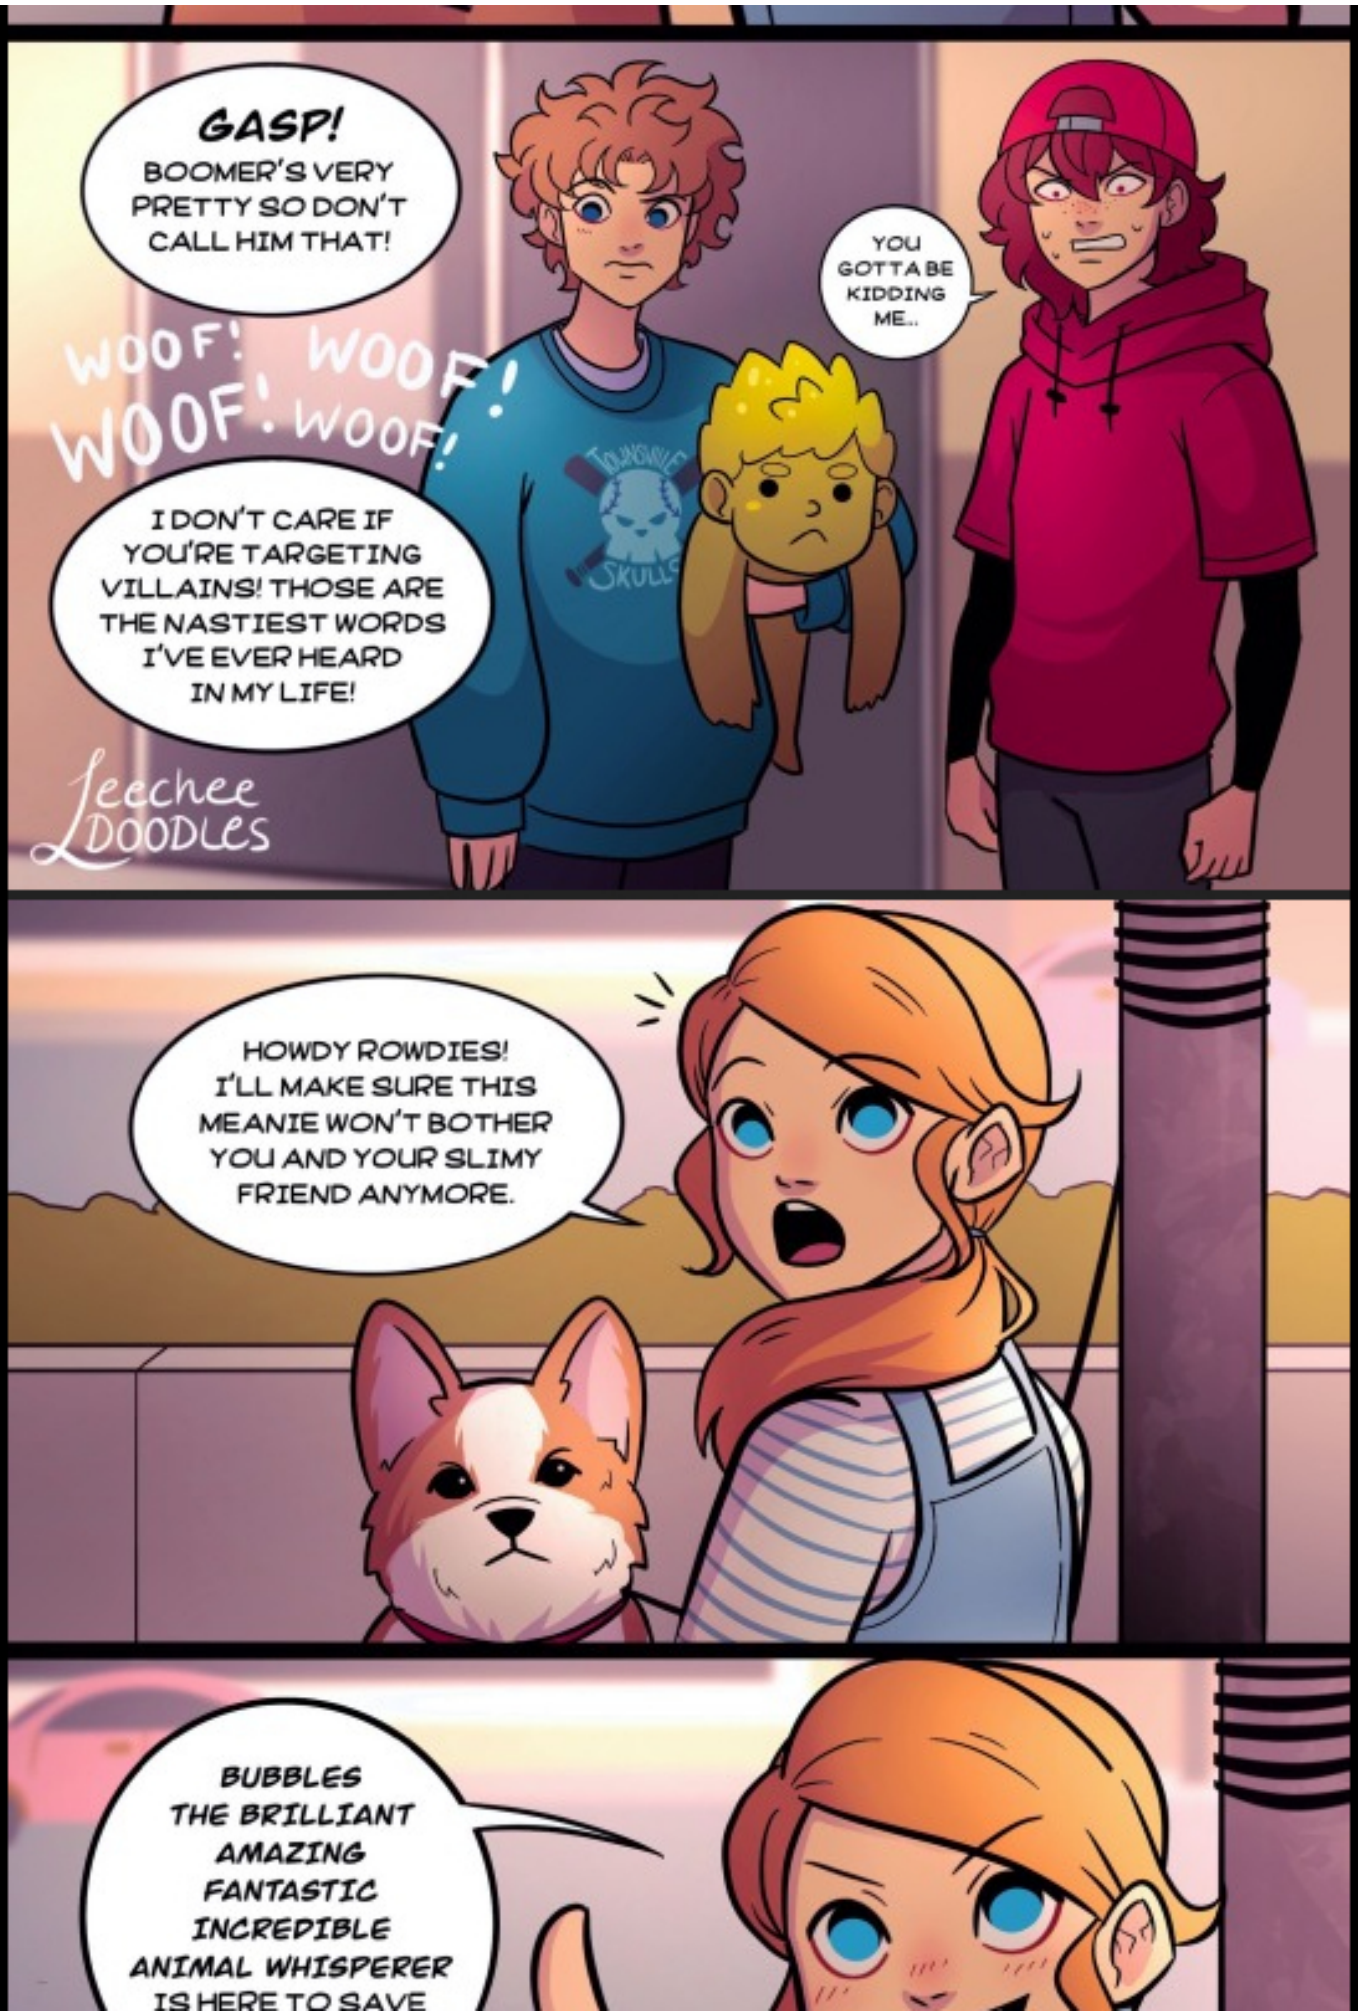
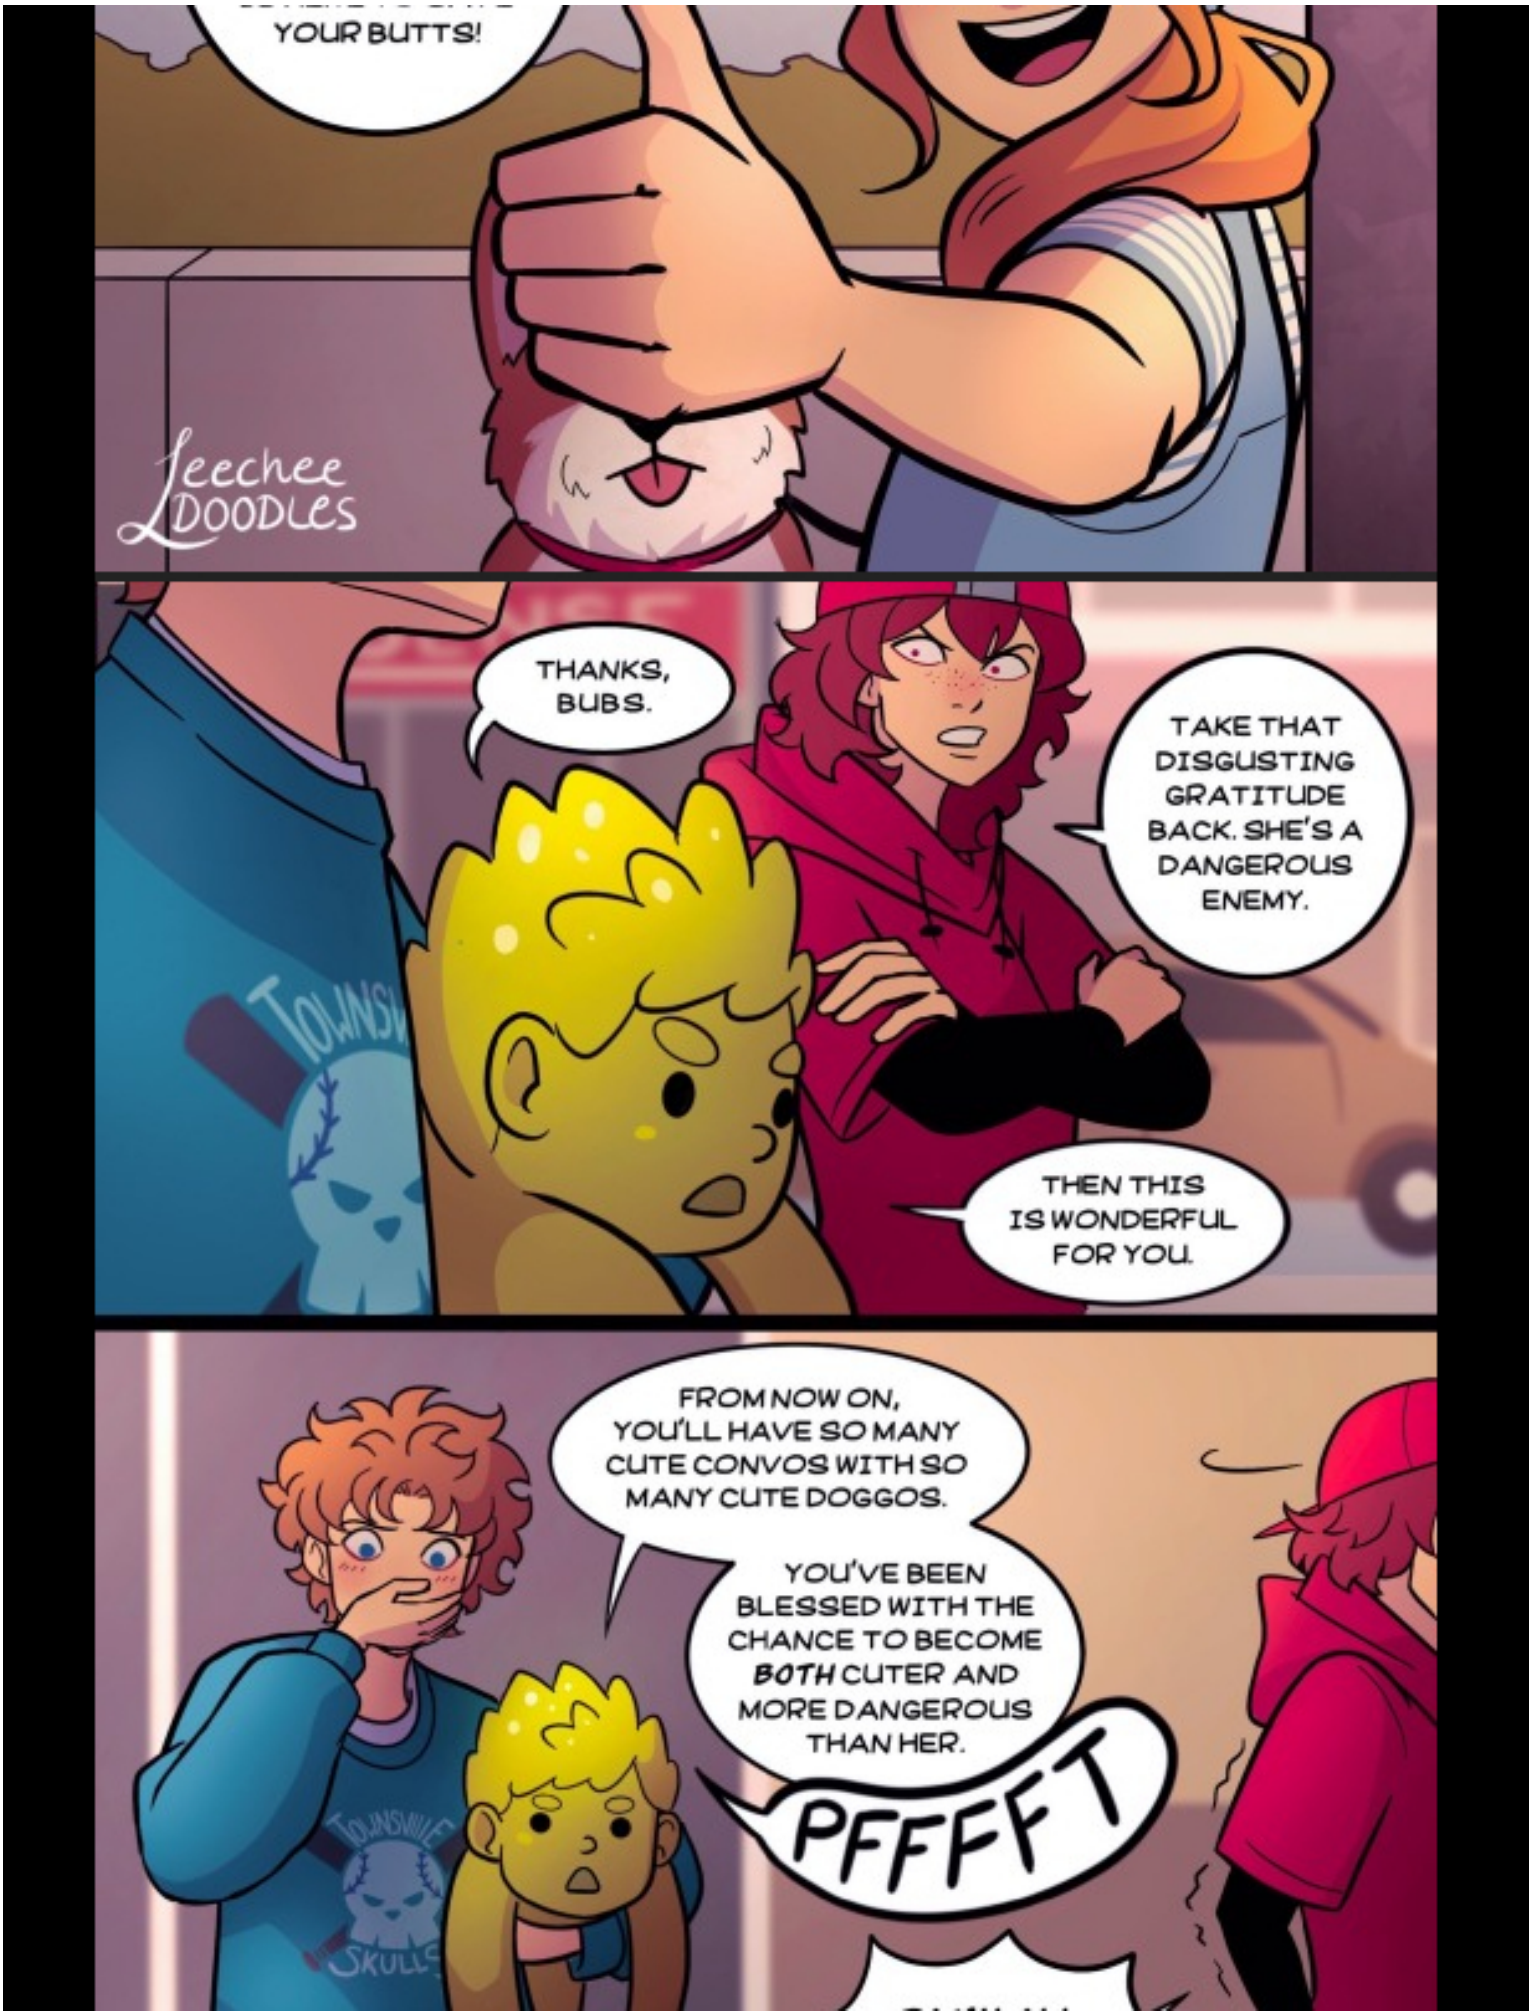
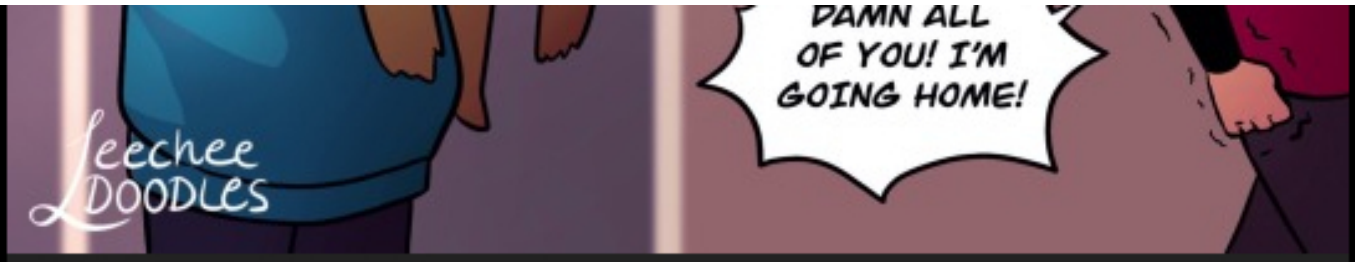
THAT FILTHY LANGUAGE IS UNACCEPTABLE!
WOOF!
WOOF!
WOOF!
I'M TOTALLY TELLING ON YOU WHEN YOUR OWNER GETS BACK SO UM...
Leechee Doodles
DON'T THINK FOR SECOND THAT YOU'RE GONNA GET AWAY WITH THIS!
WOOF!



GASP! BOOMER'S VERY PRETTY SO DON'T CALL HIM THAT!
WOOF! WOOF! WOOF! WOOF!
I DON'T CARE IF YOU'RE TARGETING VILLAINS! THOSE ARE THE NASTIEST WORDS I'VE EVER HEARD IN MY LIFE!
YOU GOTTA BE KIDDING ME..
Leechee DOODLES
HOWDY ROWDIES! I'LL MAKE SURE THIS MEANIE WON'T BOTHER YOU AND YOUR SLIMY FRIEND ANYMORE.
BUBBLES THE BRILLIANT AMAZING FANTASTIC INCREDIBLE ANIMAL WHISPERER IS HERE TO SAVE



YOUR BUTTS!
Leechee DOODLES
THANKS, BUBS.
TAKE THAT DISGUSTING GRATITUDE BACK. SHE'S A DANGEROUS ENEMY.
THEN THIS IS WONDERFUL FOR YOU.
FROM NOW ON, YOU'LL HAVE SO MANY CUTE CONVOS WITH SO MANY CUTE DOGGOS.
YOU'VE BEEN BLESSED WITH THE CHANCE TO BECOME BOTH CUTER AND MORE DANGEROUS THAN HER.
PFFFFT



Ruthless Brick was NOT happy with his new ability to have cute convos with cute doggos... but at least he wasn't alone! Maybe he'll learn to just embrace it one day haha. Also after storming off it took him about 10 minutes to realize he was walking the wrong way home 🤡 (Side note: Bubbles didn't know that was Butch. She assumed it was just a slimy friend they picked up lol)

The toaster is a lady who warms toast between her massive bazonkas

The oven/stove are a dragon that turns into a girl

The fridge / freezer are magical ice princesses

The dishwasher is a whore

And the microwave is the oven's little sister can we talk about how this was the 1960s and a black woman just told a white southern dude to GET HIS SHIT TOGETHER AND DO WHAT SHE TELLS HIM and she's correct and just in doing so and everyone including the audience knows it

this was on tv

in the 60s

god i love nichelle nichols so fucking much

deepspacebutts

It's great because most younger people today would barely blink at a scene like this, but then you remember what kind of time this was written in, and... bam.

strikelikeahawk Follow

Also remember that DeForest Kelly went along with it. The white southern gentleman could've fought the scene, played it tougher ... DeForest wasn't like that. You know he wanted this moment as much as Nichelle did. It's a beautiful moment that these two deliver perfectly, at the precise cultural moment it would have the best impact.

specialagentace Follow

There is practically nothing about this series I don't love.

It was written by a man who had the imagination to dream up a world where poverty had been eliminated - where equality was simply a Thing - where an entire world of humanity had found a common thread and had moved from fighting each-other because there was nothing left to fight for (For good reasons rather than dystopian bad ones) and have turned their endless drive toward exploring the universe around them.

It was unapologetic about it's blatant sociopolitical commentary - it did not shy away from the hard stuff and it didn't pull punches.

The cast was intentionally diverse. It put women and people of color and political enemies (russians) all together, working together in harmony, toward a common goal without falling back on stereotypes or dehumanizing any of them.

And it was backed and produced by an independently wealthy woman who refused to let this little show fall to the sidelines because big production companies didn't want it. A little known fact: Lucille Ball, who owned Desilu Productions (Who bought out Desi Arnez's portion when they divorced), gave Star Trek the green light. Later, she would save the show from certain cancellation by over-riding her own board and keeping the show.

The producers consulted NASA and other scientific pioneers when creating their world - and in turn, the scientific pioneers looked at what Star Trek had come up with and strove toward recreating it.

Science drove Star Trek and Star Trek drove Science.

I f*cking love this show.

ROXXON IS A BUSINESS, PATRICK. AND SOME OF THESE KIDS ARE VERY BAD FOR BUSINESS.
THEY'RE TROUBLEMAKERS. THEY THREATEN LAW AND ORDER, THE VERY THING YOU ARE SWORN TO DEFEND.
THEY'RE TELLING THE TRUTH, SENATOR. HALF OF IT, ANYWAY.
WE ARE BAD FOR BUSINESS, WHEN YOUR BUSINESS IS SUCKING THE LIFE OUT OF THE PLANET AND ITS PEOPLE. SO THEY TRIED TO SEND US UNDERGROUND. OUT OF SIGHT, OUT OF MIND, OUT OF YOUR HAIR.
AILANA KABUA WAS BAD FOR BUSINESS TOO. SO YOU TRIED TO KILL HER. TO DEMORALIZE A GENERATION OF "TROUBLEMAKERS."
YOU HAVE NO PROOF.

I DON'T HEAR YOU DENYING IT.
ROXXON IS IN TROUBLE, SENATOR. THEY SAW THIS AS A MUTUALLY BENEFICIAL ARRANGEMENT. GIVE YOU THE PUBLIC SAFETY VOTES YOU SO BADLY WANTED...
...AND TAKE OUT SOME KIDS WHO WERE A THORN IN THEIR SIDE.
WE HAVE A BREACH.
SEE? LIKE CLOCKWORK. THEY'RE COMING FOR US. AND HONESTLY, SENATOR, THEY MIGHT BE COMING FOR YOU TOO.
YEAH. YOUR ASSISTANT HERE ISN'T LOOKING SO GOOD.

something that I feel like is missing from fandom nowadays is the idea that you dont have to have a unified, chronologically/tonally consistent interpretation of your favorite work. your fics dont have to fit within the same version of canon, even if theyre all canoncompliant on their own. your headcanons can contradict each other. be a multishipper. write metas that take two totally different interpretations of the same plot point. write a character as a villain and then write them as the hero next time. write a character as a lesbian and then write them as straight next time! engage in hypotheticals and drop them when you get bored! make up the rules as you go!! have fun with it!!!

My Wife Keeps Telling Me To Pour Vinegar On Bread

I love tumblr. I love that tumblr is the best social media site of 2021.

Every other site has spent the last decade perfecting the art of targeted ads. I am a wallet of flesh and blood which must be stripped bare and profiled and picked apart for the maximally efficient way to squeeze profit from my presence. Every other site will fold and morph itself to a shape of my liking - like a fairy tale trickster stealing memories and taking their mold - to lull me into compliance and loosen my coin purse.

Facebook sees me searching fitness equipment and injects my timeline with athletic wear ads. Reddit profiles the subreddits I follow and eagerly promotes a new coding bootcamp or cloud service at every turn. Google overhears me lamenting over my moving to-do list on voice call and fills in my "how much to tip movers" query before I've gotten the third word typed out.

Tumblr never even tried.

They could have. The information is there. The basic infrastructure, presumably, exists. Tumblr can recommend me tags based on tags I follow, blogs based on blogs I follow, even posts that for one reason or another may strike my fancy. Tumblr could be - SHOULD be - funneling this framework into advertising, as the only means that free-to-use social media platforms can turn a profit in our capitalistic hellscape.

They just don't.

Today I saw an ad for treating Hyperhidrosis - a condition, I think, in which a person sweats too much - and I saw it twice, four posts apart, and it is so incredibly benignly impersonally inanely untargeted apart, and it is so incredibly benignly impersonally ineptly untargeted toward me compared to all other pinpoint-aimed advertising that I'm endeared to it. Tumblr knows NOTHING about me. 8 years, 51,000 likes, and tumblr has not learned a THING about me.

Advertisements for a mattress? Shitty mobile game ads that don't make even the slightest pretense at being anything other than a candy crush rip-off? Choose-your-own adventure games either about Royal Espionage or Choosing The Wrong Dress For Your Date with ZERO in-between.

And then this. This here. The culmination, the crown-jewel of tumblr's nihilistic non-compliance with the state of social media advertising. Any pretense of capitalistic exchange is abandoned at the gas station by the side of the road. This is not a company. This is not a product. This is not anything that fulfills the contract of consumer and seller.

THIS. THIS IS WHAT TUMBLR HAS TO OFFER INSTEAD.

"Pour vinegar on your bread, fuck you."

"Put it in the garbage, fuck you."

"Your wife says you're a fucking dumbass, fuck you."

That's it. That's the advertisement. You vinegar-breadless cuck. You virgin extraordinaire bereft of bread and garbage can. I am fucking your wife right now in our vinegar-soaked motel bed. She puffs a cigarette which I pulled from the trashcan and we both laugh heartily at her recounts of your immasculine ineptitude. I don't want your money. I don't want anything from you. Fuck you.

Amazing. Amazing. What a state of things to ring in 2021. What a great platform we all collectively choose to be on.

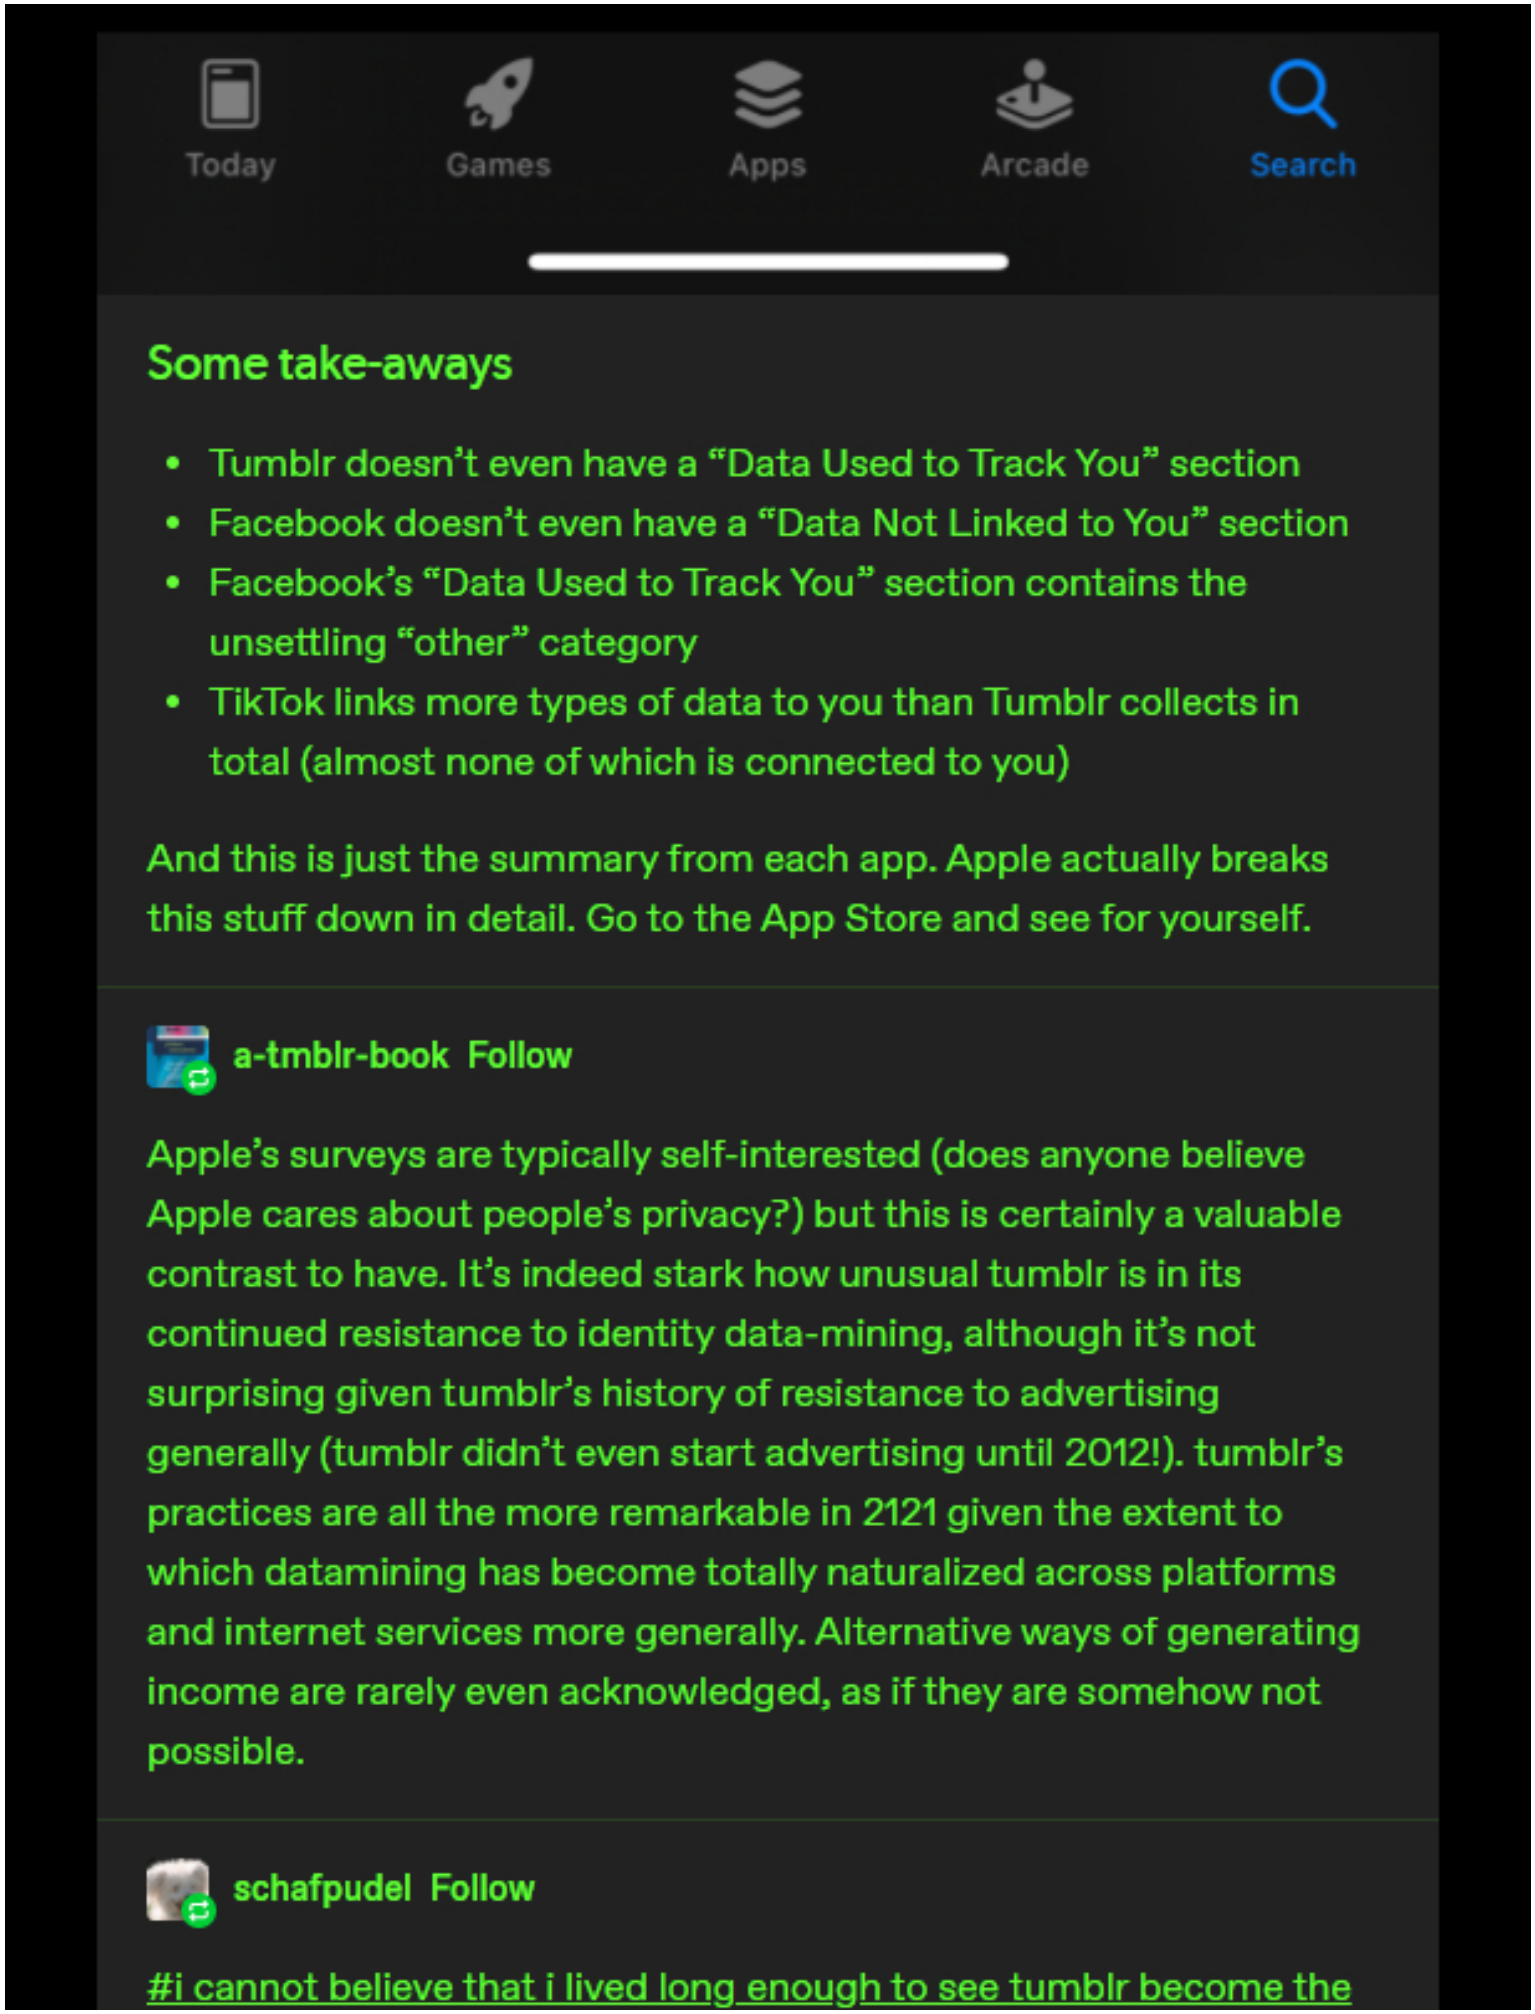
Information



Some take-aways

- Tumblr doesn't even have a "Data Used to Track You" section
- Facebook doesn't even have a "Data Not Linked to You" section
- Facebook's "Data Used to Track You" section contains the unsettling "other" category
- TikTok links more types of data to you than Tumblr collects in total (almost none of which is connected to you)

And this is just the summary from each app. Apple actually breaks this stuff down in detail. Go to the App Store and see for yourself.

Apple's surveys are typically self-interested (does anyone believe Apple cares about people's privacy?) but this is certainly a valuable contrast to have. It's indeed stark how unusual tumblr is in its continued resistance to identity data-mining, although it's not surprising given tumblr's history of resistance to advertising generally (tumblr didn't even start advertising until 2012!). tumblr's practices are all the more remarkable in 2121 given the extent to which datamining has become totally naturalized across platforms and internet services more generally. Alternative ways of generating income are rarely even acknowledged, as if they are somehow not possible.

Item Number: SCP-BJ-J “Banana Jim”

Object Class: Safe

Special Containment Procedures: SCP-BJ-J is to be kept on top of the microwave in the Site-19 break room. Any bananas found on top of the microwave are to be removed and placed in the fruit bowl nearby. All personnel onsite are to rotate SCP-BJ-J to face away from the wall after every use of the microwave. SCP-BJ-J is not to be removed from its place on top of the microwave, unless it os being used to perform tests. If SCP-BJ-J is found to be completely facing the wall, on-site security is to be notified, and SCP-BJ-J is to be moved to a new building temporarily.

Description: SCP-BJ-J is a small wooden figure of a cat, recovered from a house in [redacted]. When placed on top of a standard microwave oven, it will rotate slightly every time the microwave is operated, turning slowly to face the wall behind the microwave. If it is allowed to rotate this far, the building it is in will begin to experience SCP-BJ-J's anomalous effect, in which foods inside of the affected building (now designated SCP-BJ-J-1) will spoil remarkably quickly, at roughly the same speed as a common banana, regardless of ingredients or chemical composure. If SCP-BJ-J is allowed to face the wall for approximately two consecutive days, the effect on SCP-BJ-J-1 will begin to worsen, with the accelerated deterioration beginning to apply to non-edible objects, including parts of the building itself. If SCP-BJ-J is not placed on top of a microwave for a period exceeding twenty-four hours, its anomalous effect will immediately activate on the building or container it is in. Additionally, if SCP-BJ-J is successfully kept from facing the wall, it will seem to spontaneously generate perfectly ripe bananas on top of the microwave with it when it is not being observed.

Addendum 1: Why bananas? Why does a little wooden cat care about bananas so much? -Dr. [redacted]

All right, folks, take your seats, because class is now in session! Let's have a little talk...

Yeah, yeah, I know it's Saturday, but learning is fun.

I've had seven surgeries in my lifetime and will probably have many more in the future. And one such surgery, which happened about nine years ago, involved really fun (sarcasm) things like tubes that are shoved up your nose and end up in your stomach (I know, I didn't think it was possible either until they did it), eight gallons of really disgusting fluid, pain, lots of pain, and the direct order that I had to evacuate every single bit of food that was inside me.

And that was before the surgery even began!

After the surgery, I had to stay in the hospital for about a month.

And I was on what's called a clear-liquid diet.

What's a clear-liquid diet?

For this particular hospital:

Water, Jello, Popsicles, and Soup Broth.

A meal that was delivered to my hospital room three times a day.

That's all I was allowed to eat.

For those of you who enjoy doing math: I was in the hospital for a month, which is roughly 30 days. I had to eat this meal three times a day. That's 90 bowls of soup broth, 90 containers of Jello, and 90 Popsicles. Ninety times I had to eat these things. In the span of a month. 90.

Which means that nine years later, I am actually physically unable to eat these three items without vomiting. It's a sensory trigger.

So why didn't I talk about this from the beginning instead of enduring four death-threats, six unfollows, and nineteen messages/comments (not including the death threats and the ones that just said 'Popsicles, Jello, Soup Broth' over and over again)?

Well, there's two reasons.

A.) I don't have to. People don't ever have to explain why something is triggering to them. Once they say that it is, it should just be a given.

And

B.) The above comment is right. I am a disability advocate. And part of that advocacy includes advocating on behalf of people with triggers. And so, you've all been part of a social experiment for the past few hours - an experiment to see how people react when they see that someone has really bizarre triggers (out-of-context).

And I'm a bit sad to say that many of you have failed. Even other people with triggers and/or other advocates.

So listen because this is really important:

I know that triggers are a sensitive subject and I know that there are people out there who do joke about them.

But there are even more people out there who have triggers that seem really bizarre and even silly.

And you know what?

You cannot invalidate those triggers.

You cannot assume that someone is joking, you cannot assume that they're mocking other people with triggers that are more commonplace or 'sensible', you cannot assume that they are anything less than genuine.

If someone tells you that they have a trigger, you need to believe them, no matter how bizarre it might seem.

Class Dismissed.

beckitty Follow

Its perhaps not that surprising, but this is a common problem for people who have been on the clear liquids in hospital diet for more than a few weeks. So much so that a significant amount of money and research has gone into addressing the clear liquid diet.

Even if that wasn't the case though, OP is right. If someone says something is a trigger for them, you dont need an explanation, you need to respect it.

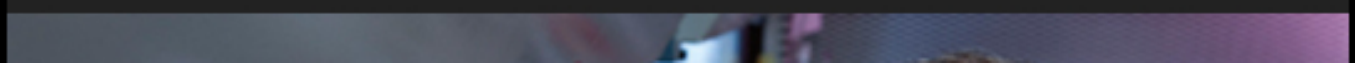
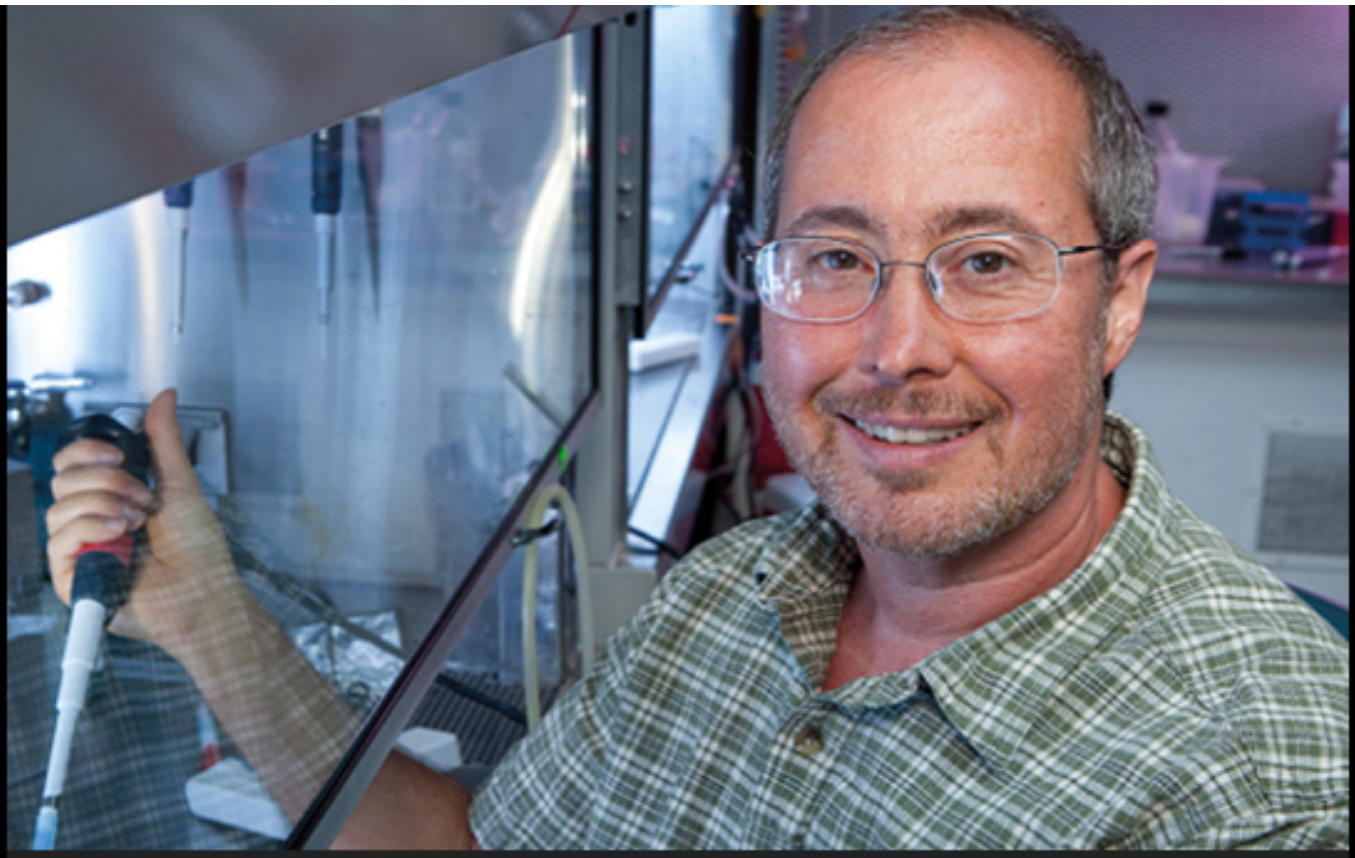
Successful trans men

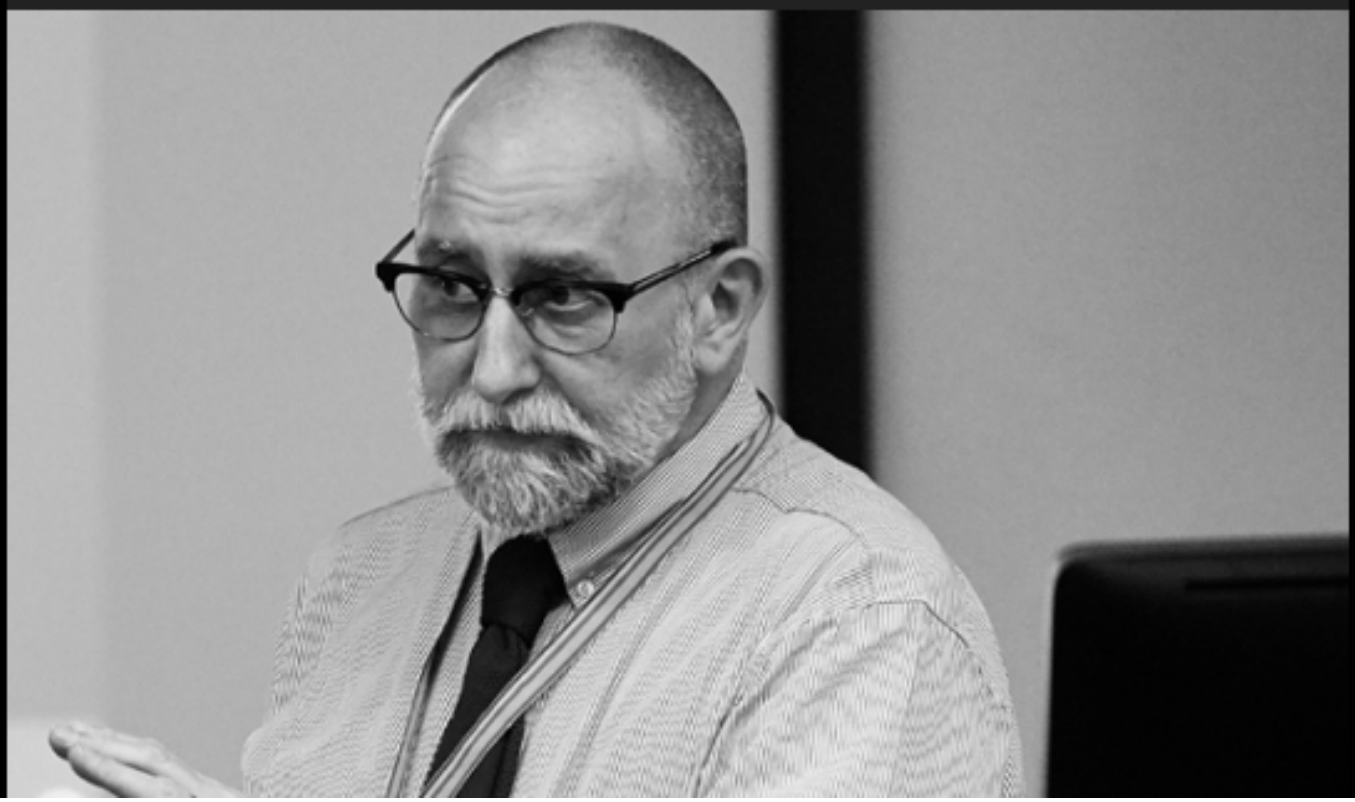
I wish I knew about men like these growing up, I wish I knew that trans men could be successful after a lifetime of never seeing anyone ‘like me’ excelling in life. So here are some trans men - some that you may have heard of, some that you may not - that are successful in a range of careers. Never let being trans hold you back, never think you can’t do something, never think there is not a place for you.





Ben Barres

American neurobiologist for Stanford University and advocate for women in science. Barre's research on the interactions between glial cells and neurons changed the way that we understand the brain and opened up a whole new field of research.



Stephen Whittle

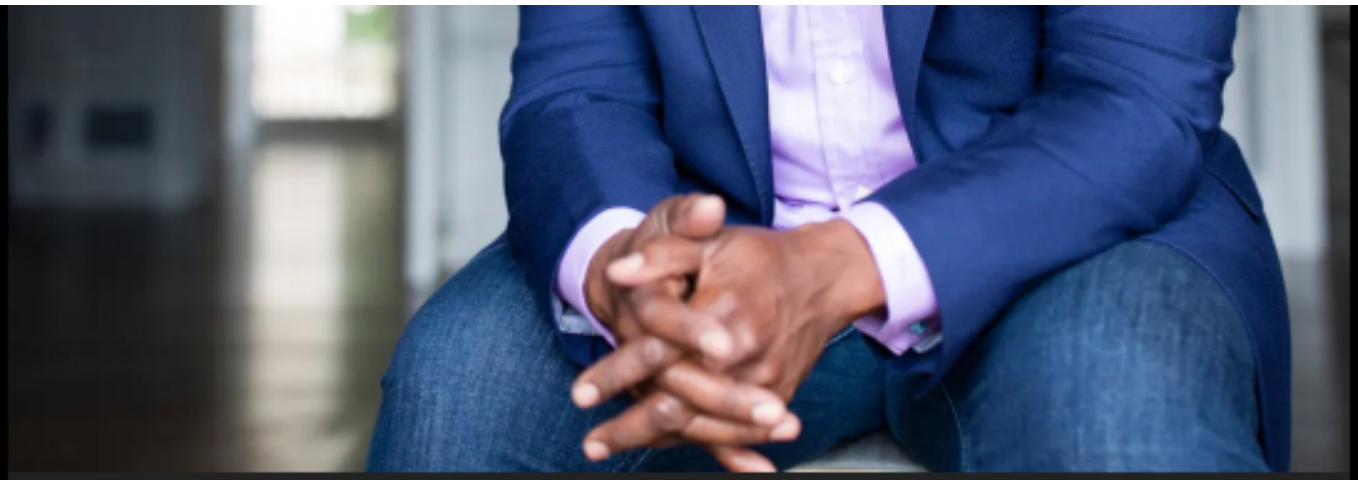
Professor of equalities law. Founder of FTM Network in 1989 and Press for Change in 1992. Whittle has been heavily involved in trans activism since joining the Self Help Association for Transsexuals in 1979. His research and activism has been instrumental in ensuring the rights of trans people in the UK.

Michael D Cohen

Actor, teacher and coach. Making his break in award-winning Nickelodeon sitcoms Harvey Danger and Danger Force he was the first series regular actor to publicly come out as transgender. Cohen has a BSc in cell biology and a masters degree in adult education, teaching at his own acting studio and providing workshops.

Chris Mosier

American triathlete and award-winning coach. Six time member of Team USA in both duathlon and triathlon, Mosier also won two national championships in racewalking and was the first transgender athlete to qualify for the Olympic trials to compete against other members of his gender.



Yance Ford

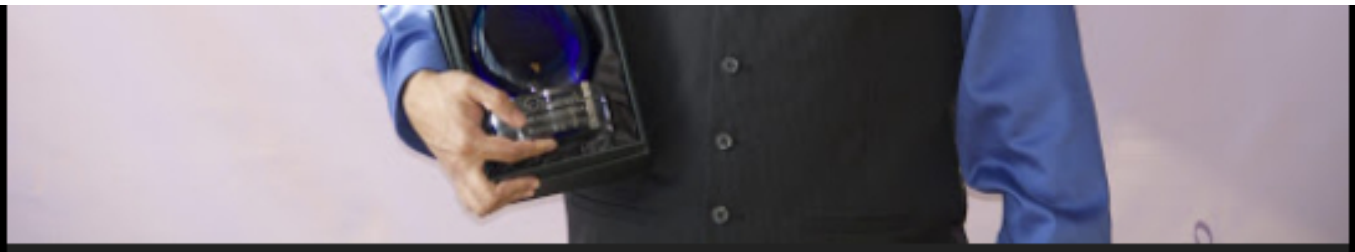
African-American film producer and director. Ford received an Emmy for Exceptional Merit in Documentary Filmmaking and was nominated for an Oscar for his part in producing and directing the documentary Strong Island which follows the death of his brother.

Kael McKenzie

Canadian judge. Serving in the Canadian Armed Forces for several years, McKenzie later attended law school and and worked as a lawyer before being appointed as a judge to the Provincial Court of Manitoba in 2015.

Shane Ortega

Native American former flight engineer in the US army, former marine and professional bodybuilder. Throughout his career Ortega has served in Iraq and Afghanistan in over 400 combat missions. He has a long history of advocating for the repeal of Don't Ask Don't Tell and the recent banning on transgender service members in the US army.



Drago Renteria

Chicano photojournalist and deaf and LGBT activist. Renteria founded the Deaf Queer Resource and is CEO of DeafVision - a webhosting and development company run by deaf people and the founder of the National Deaf LGBTQ Archives. Renteria has been instrumental in both creating and hosting many online deaf/queer spaces online along with being heavily involved in real-world activism for decades.

Phillipe Cunningham

Elected city councillor for ward 4 Minneapolis and previous special education teacher, Cunningham holds a masters degrees in Organizational Leadership & Civic Engagement and in Police Administration and is passionate about tacking inequalities in his community.

Hi, my name is Nina and I left a cult in 2006.

It is not a joke.

If I told you the name of this church, you'd look it up and go "but Nina, that's a normal branch of evangelical Christianity, which has its own problems but is not necessarily a cult," and you would be correct, so we'll leave the name out of it. This was one specific church that decided to spin right off the rails, in the same way that Westboro is "Baptist."

It started when a new preacher came, and it started small. He and his wife made us feel special. We were family. Truth-seekers in a frightening world. And at first it seemed so normal. Christians shouldn't smoke, for example, because the body is the temple of Christ. Okay, sure! Reasonable. It's not anything that's not backed up by medical science, even.

Then they started introducing this concept called "Bible quizzing." It's actually a whole thing with that denomination, basically teaching kids scripture by having them memorize it and take part in competitions. So far, so good—except that for some reason....if we failed a question, we got in A LOT of trouble. I missed one once because of a typo and I was DESPERATE to get the judges to change their ruling. And this was not a huge error, either. It was like "will enter in the kingdom" instead of "will enter into the kingdom." The reason for the error did not matter (even though it was outside my control). The tininess of the error did not matter. Only the error mattered, and I was pulled aside by the pastor's wife when we returned home from the competition to find out if I was "really serious about learning the word of G-d" or if I was "struggling in my faith." She was "disappointed" I had "allowed Satan" to "confuse me." And I was devastated. If I was a victim of Satan then I wasn't special. I wasn't one of the truth-seekers. I didn't belong....and oh, I wanted to belong. I had no friends at school. At church I was part of a family. Everybody loved me. I couldn't "fall away."

Over the next few years, the weirdness intensified. It became unacceptable for girls to show their knees because it was a "temptation" to "our brothers in Christ." I picked out a dress for the homecoming dance and was told I should "cover my knees and then get on them and pray for forgiveness" because the hemline of the dress hit mid-knee. I was shamed in youth group because one of our youth leaders said he was going to trace his genealogy all the way back to Adam and Eve and I said "but that's impossible, even if your family had written records all the way back the ones from before the flood would've been destroyed." The pastor began speaking of receiving "visions from G-d" telling him about the sins of the congregation, which he recited in detail while exhorting us to come to the front and pray. At one point I brought the whole service to a screeching halt by saying my grandfather was an atheist and I wanted to pray for his soul to find Jesus. (And oh boy did they pray.)

All of this culminated in me being kidnapped.

That was the point where I was starting to have doubts. Things between the old and New Testaments didn't add up and also I didn't understand how I was supposed to be going to hell for wearing jingly earrings when earrings were right in the Bible. At this point I was seventeen, and I stopped attending. My family moving made it easy; I had to find a 20-mile ride most weeks to attend, and it wasn't easy. But then I started college literally within walking distance, and my previously-clockwork attendance remained patchy, and became moreso after I got enmeshed in what very quickly (like, two dates quickly) proved to be an abusive relationship. The pastor told me it was my duty to stay in this relationship because I'd been "chosen by G-d" to "heal this man's soul." I'd already tried to kill myself once for the sake of the church, because I couldn't pray myself straight and I didn't want to go to hell for lust.

So here I am, 18 years old, for the first time telling my pastor "I'm not so sure."

Within two days the youth leader showed up at my door and told me I'd been sponsored to go to an event called Acquire the Fire. I said I couldn't go because of midterms and was told that I would go, or they would tell my professor I'd had a family emergency and they'd pick me up.

I went. It was three days of hell—Christian death metal bands physically hurting me due to problems with my ears, and a "laying on of hands" right in front of the speakers while I sobbed because "the devil is in you, or the name of the lord wouldn't be causing you pain." (Spoiler alert, it wasn't the name of the lord, it was the insane decibel level.) At one point the pastor's daughter took me outside to get away from it. It was three days of being told so many lies, hearing that I should completely obliterate my identity in the name of Christ, being told AIDS was a judgment from G-d, cancer was a judgment from G-d, Starbucks was a tool of the devil, that the speaker could hear our thoughts and none of us were heavenbound.

I got back home and alerted campus security that I was under risk.

I never went back—that was one of many reasons, but it was the biggest, and I was done. But I spent another five years slowly deprogramming. “Our G-d is an Awesome G-d” is still a trigger for me. I’m religious (I eventually converted to Judaism), but walking into a church for any reason makes me profoundly uneasy.

And it all started with a lonely ten-year-old who wanted to be special and was told you are, you are, you are, that’s why you get to know so many special things, that’s why people are cruel to you, they just don’t realize the truth....and it ended with me nearly dying.

You may think this sounds wild. It is. But I’m still in touch with another survivor who’s here on Tumblr, and I wouldn’t be surprised if they make themselves known.

It isn’t a joke. It isn’t funny. It is a very real danger and the smarter you think you are, the worse it is, because these cults are savvy and they know just how to deal with people like you.

Don’t fuck with cults unless you want to die miserably, probably alone and in pain.

Just don’t.

Mort had just stepped backwards again. Through a wall.

The leading thief glared at the solid stone that had swallowed Mort, and then threw down his knife.

'Well, – – – – me,' he said. 'A – – – – ing wizard. I hate – – – – ing wizards!'

'You shouldn't – – – – them, then,' muttered one of his henchmen, effortlessly pronouncing a row of dashes.

How to Criticize Israel Without Being Anti-Semitic

If you've spent any time discussing or reading about the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, I guarantee you've heard some variation of this statement:

OMG, Jews think any criticism of Israel is anti-Semitic!

In the interests of this post, I'm going to assume that the people who express such sentiments are acting in good faith and really don't mean to cause pain to or problems for Diaspora Jewry. For those good-faith people, I present some guidelines for staying on the good side of that admittedly murky line, along with the reasoning why the actions I list are problematic. (And bad-faith people, you can no longer plead ignorance if you engage in any of these no-nos. Consider yourselves warned.) In no particular order:

1. Don't use the terms "bloodthirsty," "lust for Palestinian blood," or similar. Historically, Jews have been massacred in the belief that we use the blood of non-Jews (particularly of children) in our religious rituals. This belief still persists in large portions of the Arab world (largely because white Europeans deliberately spread the belief among Arabs) and even in parts of the Western world. Murderous, inhumane, cruel, vicious–fine. But blood...just don't go there. Depicting Israel/Israelis/Israeli leaders eating children is also a no-no, for the same reason.
2. Don't use crucifixion imagery. Another huge, driving motivation behind anti-Semitism historically has been the belief that the Jews, rather than the Romans, crucified Jesus. As in #1, this belief still persists. There are plenty of other ways to depict suffering that don't call back to ancient libels.

suffering that don't call back to ancient libels.

3. Don't demand that Jews publicly repudiate the actions of settlers and extremists. People who make this demand are assuming that Jews are terrible people or undeserving of being heard out unless they "prove" themselves acceptable by non-Jews' standards. (It's not okay to demand Palestinians publicly repudiate the actions of Hamas in order to be accepted/trusted, either.)
4. Don't say "the Jews" when you mean Israel. I think this should be pretty clear. The people in power in Israel are Jews, but not all Jews are Israelis (let alone Israeli leaders).
5. Don't say "Zionists" when you mean Israel. Zionism is no more a dirty word than feminism. It is simply the belief that the Jews should have a country in part of their ancestral homeland where they can take refuge from the anti-Semitism and persecution they face everywhere else. It does not mean a belief that Jews have a right to grab land from others, a belief that Jews are superior to non-Jews, or any other such tripe, any more than feminism means hating men. Unless you believe that Israel should entirely cease to exist, you are yourself Zionist. Furthermore, using "Zionists" in place of "Israelis" is inaccurate and harmful. The word "Zionists" includes Diasporan Jews as well (most of whom support a two-state solution and pretty much none of whom have any influence on Israel's policies) and is used to justify anti-Semitic attacks outside Israel (i.e., they brought it on themselves by being Zionists). And many of the Jews IN Israel who are most violent against Palestinians are actually anti-Zionist–they believe that the modern state of Israel is an offense against God because it isn't governed by halakha (traditional Jewish religious law). Be careful with the labels you use.
6. Don't call Jews you agree with "the good Jews." Imposing your values on another group is not okay. Tokenizing is not okay. Appointing yourself the judge of what other groups can or should believe is not okay.

7. Don't use your Jewish friends or Jews who agree with you as shields. (AKA, "I can't be anti-Semitic, I have Jewish friends!" or "Well, Jew X agrees with me, so you're wrong.") Again, this behavior is tokenizing and essentially amounts to you as a non-Jew appointing yourself arbiter over what Jews can/should feel or believe. You don't get to do that.
8. Don't claim that Jews are ethnically European. Jews come in many colors–white is only one. Besides, the fact that many of us have some genetic mixing with the peoples who tried to force us to assimilate (be they German, Indian, Ethiopian, Italian...) doesn't change the fact that all our common ancestral roots go back to Israel.
9. Don't claim that Jews "aren't the TRUE/REAL Jews." Enough said.
10. Don't claim that Jews have no real historical connection to Israel/the Temple Mount. Archaeology and the historical record both establish that this is false.
11. Don't accuse Diasporan Jews of dual loyalties or treason. This is another charge that historically has been used to justify persecution and murder of Jews. Having a connection to our ancestral homeland is natural. Having a connection to our co-religionists who live there is natural. It is no more treasonous for a Jew to consider the well-being of Israel when casting a vote than for a Muslim to consider the well-being of Islamic countries when voting. (Tangent: fuck drone strikes. End tangent.)
12. Don't claim that the Jews control the media/banks/country that isn't Israel. Yet another historical anti-Semitic claim is that Jews as a group intend to control the world and try to achieve this aim through shadowy, sinister channels. There are many prominent Jews in the media and in the banking industry, yes, but they aren't engaged in any kind of organized conspiracy to take over those industries, they simply work in those industries. The phrase "the Jews control" should never be heard in a debate/discussion of Israel.

13. Don't depict the Magen David (Star of David) as an equivalent to the Nazi swastika. The Magen David represents all Jews–not just Israelis, not just people who are violent against Palestinians, ALL JEWS. When you do this, you are painting all Jews as violent, genocidal racists. DON'T.
14. Don't use the Holocaust/Nazism/Hitler as a rhetorical prop. The Jews who were murdered didn't set foot in what was then Palestine, let alone take part in Israeli politics or policies. It is wrong and appropriative to try to use their deaths to score political points. Genocide, racism, occupation, murder, extermination–go ahead and use those terms, but leave the Holocaust out of it.
15. In visual depictions (i.e., political cartoons and such), don't depict Israel/Israelis as Jewish stereotypes. Don't show them in Chassidic, black-hat garb. Don't show them with exaggerated noses or frizzled red hair or payus (earlocks). Don't show them with horns or depict them as the Devil. Don't show them cackling over/hoarding money. Don't show them drinking blood or eating children (see #1). Don't show them raping non-Jewish women. The Nazis didn't invent the tropes they used in their propaganda–all of these have been anti-Semitic tropes going back centuries. (The red hair trope, for instance, goes back to early depictions of Judas Iscariot as a redhead, and the horns trope stems from the belief that Jews are the Devil's children, sent to destroy the world as best we can for our "father.")
16. Don't use the phrase "the chosen people" to deride or as proof of Jewish racism. When Jews say we are the chosen people, we don't mean that we are biologically superior to others or that God loves us more than other groups. Judaism in fact teaches that everyone is capable of being a righteous, Godly person, that Jews have obligations to be ethical and decent to "the stranger in our midst," and that non-Jews don't get sent to some kind of damnation for believing in another faith. When we say we're the chosen people, we mean that, according to our faith, God gave us extra responsibilities and codes of behavior that other groups aren't burdened with, in the form of the Torah. That's all it means.

17. Don't claim that anti-Semitism is eradicated or negligible. It isn't. In fact, according to international watchdog groups, it's sharply on the rise. (Which sadly isn't surprising–anti-Semitism historically surges during economic downturns, thanks to the belief that Jews control the banks.) This sort of statement is extremely dismissive and accuses us of lying about our own experiences.
18. Don't say that since Palestinians are Semites, Jews/Israelis are anti-Semitic, too. You do not get to redefine the oppressions of others, nor do you get to police how they refer to that oppression. This also often ties into #8. Don't do it. Anti-Semitism has exclusively meant anti-Jewish bigotry for a good century plus now. Coin your own word for anti-Palestinian oppression, or just call it what it is: racism mixed with Islamophobia.
19. Don't blow off Jews telling you that what you're saying is anti-Semitic with some variant of the statement at the top of this post. Not all anti-Israel speech is anti-Semitic (a lot of it is valid, much-deserved criticism), but some certainly is. Actually give the accusation your consideration and hear the accuser out. If they fail to convince you, that's fine. But at least hear them out (without talking over them) before you decide that.

I'm sure this isn't a comprehensive list, but it covers all the hard-and-fast rules I can think of. (I welcome input for improving it.)

But wait! Why should I care about any of this? I'm standing up for people who are suffering!

You should care because nonsense like the above makes Jews sympathetic to the Palestinian plight wary and afraid of joining your cause. You should care because, unfortunately, the Israeli-Palestinian conflict has correlated to an uptick in anti-Semitic attacks around the world, attacks on Jews who have no say in Israeli politics, and this kind of behavior merely aggravates that, whether you intend it to or not.

The Israeli-Palestinian conflict is a real minefield in that it's a clash between oppressed people of color and an ethnoreligious group that is dominant in Israel but marginalized and brutalized elsewhere (often nowadays on the exact grounds that they share ethnoreligious ties with the people of Israel), so it's damned hard to toe the line of being socially aware and sensitive to both groups. I get that. But I think it is possible to toe that line, and I hope this post helps with that. (And if a Palestinian makes a similar list of problematic arguments they hear targeted at them, I'd be happy to reblog it, too.)

So, TL;DR version:

1. Do go ahead and criticize Israel.
2. Don't use anti-Semitic stereotypes or tropes.
3. Don't use overly expansive language that covers Jews as a whole and not just Israel.
4. Don't use lies to boost your claims.
5. Do engage Jews in conversation on the issues of Israel and of anti-Semitism, rather than simply shutting them down for disagreeing.
6. Do try to be sensitive to the fact that, fair or not, many people take verbal or violent revenge for the actions of Israelis on Diasporan Jews, and Diasporan Jews are understandably frightened and upset by this.

May there be peace in our days.

Forgiveness is such a trap and I honestly highly recommend not forgiving people who've done irreparable damage in your life. Despite what people say, you don't need to forgive someone to have peace in your life.

So yes, you absolutely do need to forgive too have peace in your life, and science backs this up.

afronerdism Follow

It actually doesn't in fact a lot of therapists talk about forgiveness as a trap and you don't need to forgive in order to let go of anger and resentment.

I encourage you to read Toxic Parents by Dr. Susan Forward but I'll include some of what she says about the forgiveness trap here:

"One of the most dangerous things about forgiveness is that it undercuts your ability to let go of your pent-up emotions. How can you acknowledge your anger against a parent whom you've already forgiven? Responsibility can go only one of two places: outward, onto the people who have hurt you, or inward, into yourself. Someone's got to be responsible. So you may forgive your parents but end up hating yourself all the more in exchange.

I also noticed that many clients rushed to forgiveness to avoid much of the painful work of therapy. They believed that by forgiving they could find a shortcut to feeling better. A handful of them 'forgave,' left therapy, and wound up sinking even deeper into depression or anxiety.

Several of these clients clung to their fantasies: 'All I have to do is forgive and I will be healed, I will have wonderful mental health, everybody is going to love everybody, we'll hug a lot, and we'll finally be happy.' Clients all too often discovered that the empty promise of forgiveness had merely set them up for bitter disappointment."

lemonlordleah-shinzawa-kitten Follow

Forgiveness is not the best word, true. It is very much processing and letting go of anger. I think we usually mean the same thing when we say "forgiveness," but it's best to be clear.

If someone does something horrible to you, you don't HAVE to forgive them. You do however need to process that anger, sadness, pain, or fear and then let it go if you want to improve your own well-being. No one deserves the ability to poison your mind forever.

prismatic-bell

I would argue that there are different kinds of forgiveness, too. Like, my mom was wildly abusive. We ended up estranged. Eventually, as I went through therapy, I peeked back into her life because I was worried about her due to Covid. Turns out she'd also been going through therapy.

I forgave her. But I made it clear that this was not an absolution of guilt—it was "I am willing to set boundaries and work with you to build a healthier relationship."

She died six months later. I wouldn't trade that six months for ANYTHING—not anything in the world. We had actual meaningful talks. We mended a lot of fences. I got her potato salad recipe and introduced her to "Hozier has more songs than Take Me To Church and you might like them." (She didn't like all of them, but she did find a new favorite.)

Most of all, she said something I DESPERATELY needed, even after all of the “reparenting” and “processing” I’d done: “I never realized, all those times you tried to talk to me about your anime conventions, you were trying to share a part of yourself with me that really mattered to you, and I kept pushing it aside. And I’m so sorry.” I guarantee you that sentence came out of her own therapy, but there is ZERO question in my mind that it was genuine.

For six months, I had a mom and looked forward to building a future relationship. And I grieve as much for the loss of that future as I do for her death, because I did find freedom in that forgiveness.

But this is very, VERY different from “I forgive you! It never happened! Go ahead and hurt me again!” I set boundaries. A lot of difficult talks were had. And she did sometimes try to fall back into older, toxic patterns, which doesn’t surprise me because she was 61 years old and old habits die hard even with therapy, and when she did I had to go “nope, we’re not getting back on your bullshit.”

Forgiveness does not mean become a doormat, and never should. That way lies more harm.

Critics also suggest that planes flying low over the nearby village of Ollantaytambo and its archaeological park filled with ruins and a massive Inca fortress with large stone terraces, would cause incalculable damage to fragile Inca ruins there and destroy the peace and beauty of the area.

The new airport will make access to the site much easier, and thus encourage greater numbers than ever before to visit.

But Machu Picchu is already overwhelmed by almost double the limit of tourists as recommended by UNESCO. [see also India's Taj Mahal - an incredible site simply reeling under a relentless, ineffectively managed tourist, both domestic and international, onslaught] so, i live on the fourth floor of an apartment building that faces a fairly busy street; it's on a hill so car noises are pretty regular over the course of the day. because i'm high above the street, you obviously can't see the cars unless you look out the window, right? but sometimes the sun reflects off the car roofs or whatever, and so there'll be a light on my ceiling as a car passes by.

so my cat? whenever he hears a loud engine, day or night, he looks at my ceiling. even if there is no refraction going on. to him, those are the sounds of light on the ceiling. sometimes the light appears and there is a loud noise. it's 8pm and a truck just passed and he watched the ceiling as the car moved past my windows – no reflection this time of night, but trucks are ceiling creatures and i just think that's such a like – it's a good correlation, buddy!! you figured it out!! you're wrong but you're so smart!!

I had a dream that the king and the queen of a small country had a daughter. They needed a son, a first-born son, so in secret, without telling anyone of their child's gender, they travelled to the nearby woods that were rumoured to house a witch.

They made a deal with that witch. They wanted a son, and they got one. A son, one made out of clay and wood, flexible enough to grow but sturdy enough to withstand its destined path, enchanted to look like a human child. The witch asked for only one thing, and that was for their daughter.

They left the girl readily.

The witch raised her as her own, and called her Thyme. The princess grew up unknowing of her heritage, grew up calling the witch Mama, and the witch did her very best to earn that title.

She was taught magic, and how to forage in the woods, how to build sturdy wooden structures and how to make the most delicious stews. The girl had a good life, and the witch was pleased.

The girl grew into a woman, and learned more and more powerful magics, grew stronger from hauling wood and stones and animals to cook, grew smarter as the witch taught her more.

She learned to deal with the people in the villages nearby, learned how to brew remedies and medicines and how to treat illness and injury, and learned how to tell when someone was lying.

Every time the pair went into town, the people would remark at just how similar Thyme was to her mother.

(Thyme does not know who and what she is. She does not know that she was born a princess, that she was sold. She only knows that one night after her mother read her a story about princesses and dragons, her mother had asked her if she ever wanted to be a princess.)

((Thyme only knows that she very quickly answered no. She likes being a witch, thank you very much, she likes the power that comes with it and the way that she can look at things and know their true nature.))

The witch starts preparing the ritual early, starts collecting the necessities in the winter so they can be ready by the fall equinox. Her daughter helps, and does not ask what this is for, just knows that it is important.

The witch looks at Thyme, both their hands raised into the air over a complicated array of plants, tended carefully to grow into a circle, and says, sorry.

Keep reading

cyndare Follow

She is alone once again, and this time, the guilt gnaws at her, even though she knows she had to do it.

It is alright to be selfish, Thyme.

She burns the circle of plants, unable to bear looking at it. Most of the magic was used in the ritual, but what is left bleeds into the soil with the plants and ash and heart of the boar. She uses the soil to plant herbs around her home, the ones that bear her daughter's name.

The witch throws herself into her spells and her garden and helping the villagers with their ailments if they ask, and she grieves. The village grieves with her – Thyme was loved by them too, and at first they want to know what happened.

How can she tell them? How can she manage another lie?

But when she only manages to say she is gone, the look on her face is explanation enough. She hears rumours, those first few weeks, whispering that Thyme had gone to seek adventure and fortune in the wild somewhere, and it's a dagger to her heart.

She knows Thyme will survive, because she is Thyme and she doesn't know how many times this cycle has happened. But it still hurts. It always hurts, but slowly, as the years go by, she learns to move on.

Keep reading

I don't often do this, but I did a repaint of the Rumpelstiltskin I painted back in December–I sort of underestimated the power of the Rumple fandom and was not expecting the original to get quite so many reblogs, and every time I saw a notification pop up in my feed I just felt like youknow, maybe I should fix his noodle hands and give him some eyebrows? I felt a little guilty about leaving you such a noodle boy.

So I did–unfortunately I can't reblog and change the original photo at the same time, so I'll leave the other one in it's separate post. That picture has a slightly different vibe anyway.

Norse mythology in a nutshell

Loki: Wow, it sure would suck if someone decided to do the thing, huh?

Everyone else: Pretty much.

Loki: I mean, it would really fuck shit up.

Everyone else: Basically.

Loki: Can you even imagine what would happen if someone actually did the thing? Like, wow. Everything on fire. People screaming and shit. Absolute carnage. Thor in tears. Freyja on a rampage. Odin crying into his eye patch. Just imagine.

Everyone else: That's essentially the situation.

Loki: Thank Asgard that no-one has taken it upon themselves to do the thing. I, for one, am gracious that the thing has not been undertaken yet. May it remain this way for literally hours to come.

Everyone else: You've done the thing, haven't you?

Loki: I am agog. I am aghast. How could you insinuate that I, Loki, the Trickster god, would have done the thing? This is an outrage. I won't stand for it. I demand a lawyer and also a horse.

Everyone else: There's a note here that says 'I totally did the thing, you bunch of jerkwads, ha-ha-ha I tricked you so good, signed Loki xxx'

Loki: … in hindsight, I may, in fact, have done the thing. But it was just a little joke. A little chuckle amongst friends. Tomfoolery. Japes. A tiny trick.

Everyone else: The world is literally ending because you did the thing.

Loki: Oh my Æsir, fine, I'll fix it. Fuck, why do I have to fix everything around here? Trickster god? Might as well call myself the Fixter god. Also my son is a wolf.

Last night, my comic reading led to Thor the Mighty Avenger. I read this one shortly after it came out in 2010, and completely forgot about it. Really cute art, but on the whole, largely forgettable and not really required reading at all. But I guess I retained a lot more than I realised, because I noticed that the fic I posted the other day was literally ripped from these pages.

Loki learning tricks from really old books he's not supposed to be looking at.

Also finding weird new ways to break the rules.

And gaining forbidden knowledge from grimoires he shouldn't have been poking his nose into.

That's it. That's the entire fic.

pretty telling that when odin is listing Loki's crimes in TDW he makes no mention of his attack on Jötunheim. He also never returns the casket. To him Jötunn lives are worthless and meaningless... presumably even that of his adopted son, who he raised for years until the events of Thor 2011 rendered him useless as a tool and reduced him to nothing more than a threat. Odin tells Loki his birthright was to die. To Odin he was never Thor's equal. Just something he saved from death - and everything he gave Loki, even his very life, nothing more than underserved mercies he could choose to revoke at any time should Loki prove unworthy of the investment.

Does it help if I, a straight het cis nerdy science man say this: The rise of OnlyFans is great news. Sex work is work, and shaming and criminalizing it has only ever taken away the worker's power and put them in danger.

I am very happy that the tools of the internet are starting to give sex workers the control over their work, bodies, and income that has traditionally been denied to them.

Raise your hand if you're just incredibly fucking tired of people taking things the Green Brothers say out of context to make fun of some of the straight white dudes that use that privilege to their advantage to help marginilized people.

pftones3482 Follow

The Green brothers speak out about racial injustice, financial inequality, homophobia, housing issues (including homelessness), mental illness (ESPECIALLY John, who has gone through intense depression and anxiety in the past), and many other topics.

They provide dozens of free resources for students online, specifically Crash Course, and every year during the holidays they donate thousands of dollars to multiple charities.

They actively acknowledge their privilege and use it to lift other people up and provide resources for those who don't have the same privilege.

I'm sure many people don't know this, but John and Hank CREATED VidCon. They're the reason VidCon exists today. They were some of the ORIGINAL YouTubers, and they're one of the only platforms on YouTube that has stayed true to their original content idea.

People LOVE to hate on them. They love it. John was sent so many death threats and harassed so much that he gave up all social media but YouTube for a long time. The reason? People claimed he was glorifying cancer (which if you've actually READ the book, he doesn't) and that he was a "pervert" for writing about high schoolers (as if LITERALLY every single book about a high schooler isn't written by someone older than 18 I mean Jesus Christ people). Hes spoken on this a couple times but stopped because people just ignored him and dragged his name through the gutters.

The hate on Hank is, from what I've seen, fairly recent - he was kind of the forgotten brother for a while. Until he published a book where the main character was bisexual. And he said positive things about trans people. And then suddenly “Hank Green is just a dumb man and his opinions are trash.” Almost like people didn’t like that the “science man” was openly supportive of homosexuality

The Green brothers acknowledge when they get things wrong. They speak out on injustice, on inequality, and they always, ALWAYS try to do what’s right. They are some of the most wholesome straight white men I’ve ever come across in life in general, and it infuriates me that people reduce them to “okay? okay” and “oh didnt he do Crash Course?”

vegacoyote Follow

It's not so much that they're SURPRISED about it. That was actually the original plan.

This juice company agreed to donate a few acres of its own land to a bordering national park, and compost orange peels there to help restore the land. They were subsequently sued by a rival juice company for having "defiled a national park." The law sided with the rival company, and the project was discontinued early.

This isn't so much a "Wow SO SURPRISE!" as a "FUCKIN' TOLD YOU SO!"

Plus also, sixteen years ago, we might've known the answer to the question "What happens when you compost kitchen waste?" but we DIDN'T know the answer to "What happens when you dump 12,000 tons of orange peel on 7 acres of ecologically depleted wasteland?"

And for the first six months, the answer was, "7 acres of nasty-smelling, fly breeding ex-fruit sludge, and a lawsuit from a rival juice company" but 16 years LATER we can say "A 436 percent increase in company," but 16 years LATER we can say, "A 176 percent increase in above-ground biomass, and a study site so transformed we couldn't tell we had the right place until we dug the sign out of undergrowth consisting mainly of native shrubs and grasses, SUCK IT, TICO FRUIT!!!!"

- Are you already familiar with Fruits Basket? What's been your experience with the series?
  I was. I had the opportunity to be the original voice of Akito in the English Dub. I am so honored to have been asked to come back as Akitos father. I hope everyone enjoys the season as much as I have enjoyed being a part of the Fruits Basket family.
- What's your zodiac animal, and what animal would you like to be?
  I am year of the Ox, which I like. I'm happy with that. I'm not sure if the next question is asking me to choose my favorite animal. If so, it is a Wombat! The way they took care of other species during the fires in Australia, inviting them into their homes for protection was AWESOME! We could learn a lot from the wombat!

I think a lot about that Fruits Basket story where the onigiri (rice ball) thinks its plain and bad with nothing special about it but everyone else actually admires it because of the delicious plum on its back that it can't see anyway, I'm going on a second date with a girl soon and couldn't help but think "Why would she want to keep going out with me?? I'm like, so weird and a little crazy."

but then I remembered that there is also a plum on my back that I can't see and that people often like others for reasons we don't recognize in ourselves. Be kind to yourself. There's always something good about someone– however little we remember it.

This is a big old spoiler and I will tag as such but it is Fruits Basket Friday and I am literally feeling everything today so I just have to say:

Of all the scenes I can't wait to see animated at last, the last big confrontation between Yuki and Kyo is right up there at the top. I am such a sucker for those moments where two characters who have been at odds finally start communicating honestly and openly.

And this scene has so much delicious emotion and catharsis:

- Kyo voicing out loud that he thinks Tohru would be happier with Yuki
- Kyo admitting that he's always envied Yuki and Yuki just going feral because How Dare He Say it First when Yuki's been working towards that himself and the cat just up and stole his thunder.
- Kyo being the last person on earth to clue in to how happy he makes Tohru and Yuki just wailing on him to get him to wake up.
- Kyo just taking the beating because he thinks he deserves it for indirectly landing Tohru in the hospital and for very directly hurting her by pushing her away, using the very words he promised her she would never hear from him

- And more than anything else, I love that it is Yuki who finally helps Kyo realize that Tohru picked him because he makes her so happy, that he does that better than anyone else, and that it is not only okay for Kyo to love her and take care of her, he'd better cherish her with everything he has because Yuki won't tolerate Kyo hurting her like this.

I am just. Such a sucker for these huge emotional moments and Fruits Basket delivers them every time.

I still LOVE the metaphor of the scarf.

It was something clean and new that Tohru bought for herself as a comfort. She rarely buys anything for herself, but she did! She bought a brand new scarf that was super cute!

And then when her world falls apart the scarf is blown away, it is lost and crushed by the world which had no regard for her.

And it's a traffic as well, which harkens back to how her mother died as well.

But Kyo notices! He's there at just the right moment, he finds it and he knows it's hers! He picks it up, rushes to make sure it doesn't get anymore hurt than it already has.

He takes it home, takes the time and care to clean it-- to make it good as new. And when Tohru returns he still discounts his efforts, he doesn't realise the good things he has done and what it means to Tohru to be taken care of in such an unexpected way.

It's small, but he found her. He found her when nobody else was looking. And that's beautiful.

Also that whole sequence was so beautifully animated and directed. It almost made up for the Akito scene xD

Disney's Pencil Test for Frozen (2013)

I don't think Disney is aware that their movies look so much better in two dimensions magic-and-moonlit-wings Follow

That comment reminds me of another comment for which I can't recall the source; paraphrased, "The best CGI now will always look outdated ten years from now, but awesome drawings will always look like awesome drawings."

stachionalgeographic Follow

Also it was...not the best CGI

shining-magically Follow

The thing I hate most about Disney not doing 2D anymore is that the box office disappointment of Winnie the Pooh (2011) (which is adorable and hilarious btw if you've never seen it) is often pointed to as the final nail in the coffin

Y'all released a 1 hr and 9 minute cutesy collection of Pooh Bear short stories about trying to find Eeyore's lost tail on the SAME DAY AS THE FINAL HARRY POTTER FILM, of course it didn't do well

AND y'all went up against YOURSELVES because Cars 2 had just opened like three weeks before and was very much still in theaters

It was not the animation, it was never the animation

hella-marshmella Follow

I think this was an issue for The Princess and the Frog too. Not only did it come out the same month as the 2nd Chipmunk movie (which is trash but it made double what TPATF did).

You remember what came out literally one week after it?

bisexualcrises Follow

Don't forget how Disney released one of their last 2D animated films of the era Treasure Planet on the same day as the first Harry Potter film and refused to delay the release even though they knew they would have made more money. They purposefully sabotaged their 2D animated films.

universejunction Follow

I've been re-watching all those Disney renaissance films, cause kids and Disney+ (don't @ me, it's easier than piracy), and yeah, the animation really holds up. Not so much with the 3D films (looking at you, Toy Story).

joyflameball Follow

Yes, the 3D films are technologically amazing. But it'll never hold a CANDLE to the blood, sweat, and tears people put into 2D animation. And as stated above: In ten years, that technologically amazing animation will look dated.

And if you think 2D animation can't look as good as 3D animation, there are 2D animated TV SHOWS that are on a lower budget than 3D animated movies that look fucking STUNNING. Let me list a few.

Even if the story isn't the best, Steven Universe's animation is really beautiful and has such a nice style to it. The gems, the weapons, all of it just looks gorgeous. And have you SEEN the Other Friends animation?

GIF by spinel-espinela

GIF by sushitsandgiggles

Gravity Falls's episode "Not What He Seems" aired five years ago, but it looks like it could have been animated today. The animation is absolutely stunning in every way. The lighting, the colors, everything. It's just beautiful.

GIF by mvpnoona

GIF by roguearchaeopteryx

And have you SEEN The Owl House's fight scenes? Those are entirely animated in 2D, but they're so smooth and gorgeous! They look ten times better than the fight scenes in a lot of 3D animated movies!

GIF by preciseprose

GIF by inasociety

And don't get me STARTED on the Tangled The Series animation. It's done entirely lineless, which is not easy, and it looks so good that there could be an actual camera recording it in real-time. I can't describe how amazing it is in words.

GIF by sideofwritingsandramblings

GIF by imgayandgirlsarepretty

These shows are going to be looked at in ten years and still marveled at for their absolutely beautiful animation. Meanwhile, 3D animated movies that look amazing now will be seen as looking horribly, horribly dated.

queenofthefaces Follow

Since the first draft of my reply disappeared (thanks tumblr mobile) I'm going to try and summarize what I was saying before:

Basically, I think it's a bit unfair to try and completely disregard 3D animation as a tool and medium. I ABSOLUTELY agree that 2D animation deserves recognition and it's deliberate exclusion in mainstream movies by Disney is a MASSIVE disappointment and is REALLY shitty. AND I agree that 2D animation has a MUCH easier time holding up than 3D animation.

HOWEVER, when 3D animation works to its strengths, there are plenty of examples of 3D graphics that do still hold up.

In video games, for example: Super Mario Galaxy released in 2007, but still holds up, as does Jet Set Radio and Catherine (though still a little rough around the edges). There are also plenty of YouTube videos and articles you can find that give other examples as well

GIF by prosyscomtech

GIF by oceancyclonesuplex

For movies, I can see films like Spiderverse, Trolls, and Captain Underpants having a good chance at holding up in the future. They focus more on creating a unique visual style that fits their movie and are very stylized!

GIF by samuelantonioroncalminano

GIF by trollstale

GIF by thetinyshipper

And even older 3D movies like Shrek and some of the Barbie movies look pretty good still, despite being almost or over a decade old at this point

GIF by breathingchicken

GIF by genuinesmile

Additionally—there's recent examples of 3D and 2D animation being used TOGETHER for absolutely fantastic results, like in Land of the Lustrous or Promare

GIF by thechimeraoblivion

GIF by mobpsycho100

The main issue with 3D animated movies (+ video games) now is that plenty of companies care more about making a product that will work IN THE MOMENT, instead of trying to create something that will last. So hyper-realism, new technological marvels, and established tropes (like Disney's sameface in its 3D movies) will be used in a shallow and easy to consume manner. It's about the spectacle, instead of using these things as tools, carefully and sparingly.

It's the same issue with CGI in many modern movies all but replacing practical effects. Plenty of these movies age like milk because they're trying so hard to look realistic, but their CGI is basically left to do all of the work itself, which isn't what it can really do. It should be used in tandem with other effects or stylized to mask the uncanniness

(leaning into how not real it is instead of trying to trick the brain into thinking it is)

Jurassic Park is a well-used example of this. The film used a thoughtful combination of practical effects and CGI, working to the strengths of both to create a stronger whole.

Basically—I think it's a little unfair to try and pit 2D and 3D animators against one another. Both mediums require a TON of effort and skill for the animators! One is not inherently better than the other; they're just tools with different strengths and uses. Both mediums deserve to exist and to be used properly!

tazerpagan Follow

^ I'm a hardcore 2d supremacist, but the problem with 3D isn't 3D. It's the industry (well, mainly Disney) stubbornly, bitchily refusing to be artistically adventurous

I'm sorry, but that is misleading as hell. American and European trucks are bred for different purposes.

American trucks are bred for long hauls on largely straight roads. They can go for hours without a break. A European truck needs more breaks and a lighter load, and they would indeed take great internal damage if they tried to keep up with the Longsnout.

The European Shortsnout is not bred for looks, but for agility! They navigate the windy roads of Europe in a way that would be way too risky for the powerful, but more clumsy American truck. It is true that the European overheats faster at high speeds, that is the very reason that breaks every 4,5 hours are mandatory for both the truck and the handler and a day of driving can never be longer then 9 hours.

So, all in all, appreciate all of our trucks and our shared history, and be the responsible owner that gets the right breed for the right job.

kedreeva Follow

To be fair, the US does have shortnose trucks as well, they're just a breed kept mainly for very local work where, like the above says, they are working in places with lots of turns, shorter drives, and plenty of stops. I see them used for garbage pickup a lot, where a longnosed Mack wouldn't be able to fit much less maneuver, and the short nose prevents them from getting rubs (raw skin or even open sores) on their snouts.

I would also like to point out that the tags have got it backwards. The wild trucks (which I'm pretty sure are extinct in the wild now) that all modern breeds stemmed from were shortnose trucks. We had known about automobiles and domesticated several species, but the truck species was not discovered until close to the start of the 1900's, in Germany, which I BELIEVE was the first country to breed them in captivity, although England was the first country to really start using them for work. I managed to find a photo of taxidermied specimen

As you can see, it resembles both long and short nosed breeds, as well as the far more common house truck used by individuals instead of for commercial work.

As to the aggression, while the mack longnose LOOKS aggressive, they're generally gentle giants (although please do give them space on the road! not seeing you in their blind spot is NOT the same as aggression!), it is actually the smaller house truck that is often trained by their handler to be aggressive: the keyword being TRAINED, they are also not naturally aggressive. The only time I have seen a mack be commonly aggressive is when they are pulling 2 gravel trailers, and I would be cranky if I was being overworked, too. If you see them hauling that kind of load, just give them space, and you'll be fine.

ub-sessed Follow

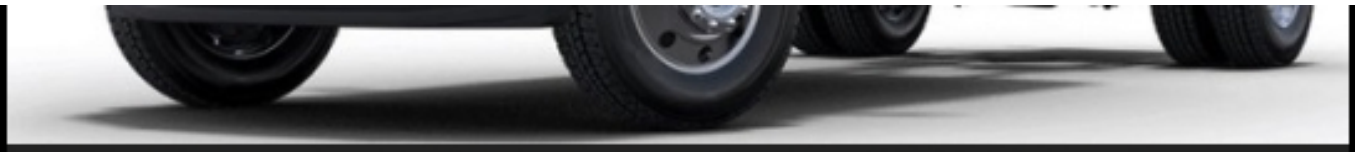
I feel like somebody should add something about the Australian variants.

nudityandnerdery Follow

From my understanding of Australian wildlife:

prismatic-bell

I would add that there is one American variant that's been bred for higher aggression, but it isn't the Mack or Peterbilt species:



It's these–a pickup/semi crossbreed that was selected for a slightly higher level of aggression, coming from a more docile standard automobile line but needing to be prepared for sturdier work.

The American Pickup Long-Hauler was originally bred for ranch and towing work, but in recent decades unethical breeders and consumers have ever-further inbred them for an extreme aesthetic. This has heightened the aggression of the breed. The vast majority of these inbreeds are then forced into inhumane conditions living in urban areas, and develop road rage as a result.

Please remember, these trucks are not at fault for what has happened to them, and rehabilitation by rehoming them to a knowledgeable owner and redirecting them into towing, hauling, and farm work will ease the worst of the strain and behavioral problems.

Alright, assholes.

I don't usually defend Tony Stark. But this "Something went wrong" bullshit really rubbed me the wrong way. Wanna know why? Because the "Something that went wrong" was Howard Stark. The man that Tony idolised, and the man that abused him. And don't give me that crap that in the MCU universe, Howard didn't neglect or hurt Tony — he did. It's very evident in the tie-in MCU comics.

But in both universes, Tony was raised by Edwin Jarvis. In 616, he has a father — Howard — who is constantly aggravated with his son, both as a result of his own drinking and because of what he feels Tony should be.

While Jarvis might be sensitive, thoughtful, intelligent and occupy roles that aren't traditionally occupied considered "masculine" (which is bullshit in itself) if Tony ever displays anything remotely indicative of a "softer side" he is ridiculed, called a sissy, told that Stark men are "made of Iron" and abused by his father:

In the MCU, things aren't depicted of being much better:

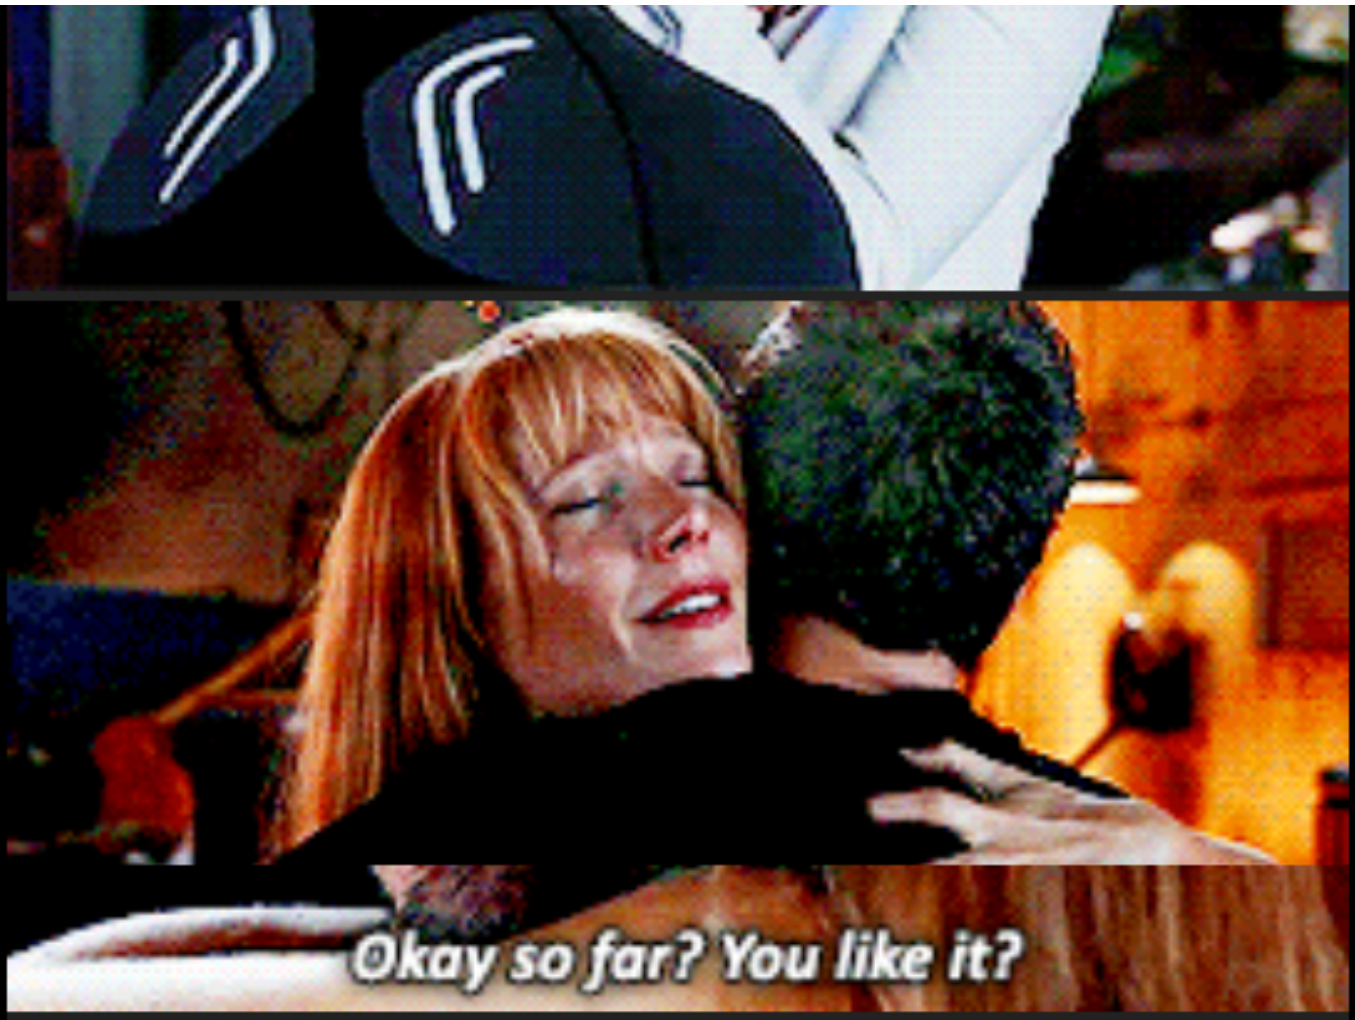
And in the MCU Jarvis, often, tried to soften the blow of Howard's words an actions. But don't think for a second that Tony didn't internalise all of that. That he didn't think that Howard Stark was the man he was supposed to be, and the man he wanted to be most like.

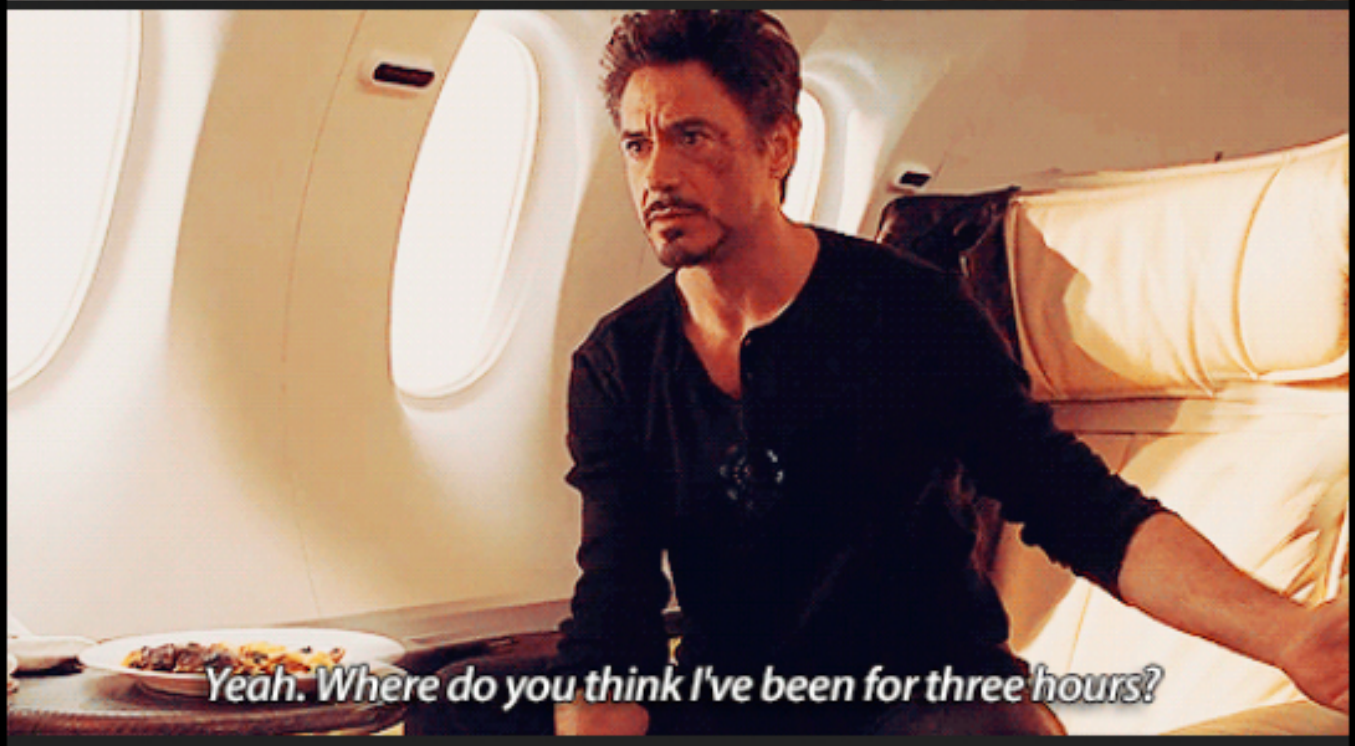
Of course, generally speaking — when Tony is the most like Howard — like at the Stark Expo, or during the senate hearings — it's almost 100% preformative. That's not who he is, or who he ever was, it's who he thinks people want him to be, because it's who his father wanted him to be.

I would go so far as to say that a lot of Tony's womanizing ways, his alcoholism, his struggles with self-identity and importance all stem from the fact that he is often torn between being the man that he assumed his father wanted to be, and who he actually is.

If you look at Tony when he's alone, or when he's with the people he cares about the most, what you see is the caring, compassionate person who Jarvis raised, and that he is a lot more capable and a lot more loving than his father ever was. And it took him a long time to be okay with that, and with showing other people that that was who he really was

So yes... Just a reminder, Jarvis helped raised this man:





Don’t confuse the armour....

Really? People just love to hate Tony - why?
Here's the thing - Tony doesn't have to step in the suit. He doesn't have to sacrifice his life. Tony really doesn't have to take all the BS that gets shoved at him by the press, so called teammates or average Joe. Tony could have done like other billionaires and said oh well, not my problem. Why should I care?
But Tony does care. Yeah, he screws up from time to time. That makes him human. Guess who else screws up from time to time - everyone else in the Avengers.

Center Court Culture Sharing

by Pat McShea

In the final hour of a Saturday-long visit to the museum by a Kent State University class, a student who played high school basketball volunteered to read aloud to nine college classmates. "With that experience you'll do a great job," I explained as I handed her a paper bearing a single long paragraph, and then directed her toward a quiet corner of the exhibit hall to a practice the assignment.

While the majority of the 40-student class opted to spend the unscheduled block of time exploring the exhibits and visiting the museum shop, ten students had accepted my offer to guide them on a tour of the Alcoa Foundation Hall of American Indians.

The now 23-year-old exhibition is divided into quadrants with a different culture presented as a focal point in each, the Tlingit of the Northwest Coast, the Hopi of the Southwest, the Iroquois Nations of the Northeast, and the Lakota and their neighbors of the Great Plains. The twin themes of Native diversity and the continued vibrancy of Native cultures are repeatedly addressed in the hall's displays. When I paused the group at the Lakota Winter Count display, and recruited the volunteer reader, I hoped to delve a little deeper into both themes.

Winter counts are a method by which groups of Lakota People record and remember their history through pictographs on a tanned animal hide or sturdy cloth. Each year, after leaders review important events and agree upon the previous year's most significant occurrence, a new entry is added to the unique document. A designated count keeper holds the responsibility to annually recite, in sequence, the story behind each pictograph, and thereby orally pass along the group's history to a listening audience.

The Winter Count on display, which covers a period of 125 years for the Sicangu Lakota people on the Rosebud Reservation in South Dakota, was created specifically for the exhibit by Dr. Thomas Red Owl Haukaas (Lakota/Creole). After summarizing the importance of winter counts for the students, I read aloud the artist's explanation of his work from a nearby label: "My winter count is from a contemporary viewpoint. It purposely includes community and national events, men and women, fullbloods, and mixedbloods as an attempt to capture the richness and complexity of our tribe."

The mention of contemporary viewpoint provided the opportunity to introduce another, albeit non-Native one, author Ian Frazier's description of high school basketball star SuAnne Big Crow in On the Rez, his 2001 account of life on the Pine Ridge American Indian Reservation.

I called back the volunteer reader and provided background for the description of an event that might be judged worthy of winter count commemoration. "The quote you're about to hear is pulled from a considerably longer story. It describes how in 1988, SuAnne Big Crow, who was then a 14-year-old basketball player from the Pine Ridge Reservation, transformed the racially charged playoff game atmosphere during pre-game warm-ups at a school in Lead, South Dakota, a white town located outside the reservation. Her actions were brave, clever, defiant, desperate, and heroic - all at the same time.”

"Swish!" by Targuman is licensed under CC BY-NC-ND 2.0.

As someone who experienced the intimidating atmosphere of away basketball games, the volunteer brought an authentic voice to her task, confidently reading Frazier's account of SuAnne dribbling as she led her team onto the court of the "deafeningly loud" high school gym. Her voice shifted to a slightly higher register, however, when the narrative departed from normal pre-game procedure.

Then she stepped into the jump-ball circle at center court, in front of the Lead fans. She unbuttoned her warm-up jacket, took it off, draped it over her shoulders, and began to do the Lakota shawl dance. SuAnne knew all the traditional dances – she had competed in many powwows as a little girl – and the dance she chose is a young woman's dance, graceful and modest and show-offy all at the same time.

The reader's calmer voice returned where the account quoted the impressions of SuAnne's surprised teammates, then turned higher as the action continued.

SuAnne began to sing in Lakota, swaying back and forth in the jump-ball circle, doing the shawl dance, using her warm-up jacket for a shawl. The crowd went completely silent. 'All that stuff the Lead fans were yelling – it was like she reversed it somehow,' a teammate said. In the sudden quiet, all you could hear was her Lakota song. SuAnne stood up, dropped her jacket, took the ball from Doni De Cory, and ran a lap around the court dribbling expertly and fast. The fans began to cheer and applaud. She sprinted to the basket, went up in the air, and laid the ball through the hoop, with the fans cheering loudly now. Of course, Pine Ridge went on to win the game.

The reader earned a sincere round of applause from her classmates for her efforts. I, in turn, felt a rewarding sense of accomplishment when she asked to keep the now deeply creased paper in her hands.

I looked this up because I had to know what it's from. It's a film called The Gay Deceivers (1969), and it's about two straight men who, seeking to avoid the draft, claim to be gay, but then have to keep up the pretense when the army places them under surveillance.

The man in the red cardigan in the clip was played by Michael Greer, who was openly gay himself - unusual for the time. He actually worked closely with the director and rewrote much of the film's dialogue to reduce the homophobia and make it more realistic. As a result it's quite progressive for its time, having a gay character, played by a gay man, living in a happy same-sex relationship, which is more than a lot of media offers us today.

Plus the clip is delightful.

it feels better than drugs when i finish making a thing—and then show it off or gift it.

and then so people my age say to me 'well—i can't draw/paint/knit/etc. like you can. my stuff would be terrible.' yeah, well duh—a part of developing skill is sucking at something and then practicing it over and over and over again until you suck less. u'll have a hard time feeling lonely or bored when you can't stop thinking abt a technique you want to try or something you want to make for someone else. making things has SAVED MY LIFE. it gave me a reason to keep living day after day when i wanted to die.

making things improved my generational relationships (when i worked for the newspaper i would talk to customers abt jamming recipes or cross-stitch, one of my grandmas always gives me pattern books and tell me abt when she knitted things for mom, my other grandma is giving me a wedding quilt that HER grandma gave her 50 years ago because she knows i will appreciate it). it also got me likeminded friends who also make things.

take a ceramics class! pick up water colors, bake cakes! learn to work on cars! make soap. DO SOMETHING THAT DOESN'T INVOLVE STARING AT A SCREEN.

YOUR ULTIMATE GUIDE FOR WHAT TO BUY EVERY MONTH OF THE YEAR

JANUARY

Winter-related apparel like sweaters, coats, and scarves all go on sale post-holidays.

New 2014 furniture collections are often released in February, so dealers are trying to move old product. Invest in discounted chairs, tables, and couches.

Before Valentine's Day causes a surge in prices, stock up on fine jewelry and perfume.

FEBRUARY

New electronics from the Consumer Electronics Show (CES) will start to hit stores, so retailers will discount older products to make room.

President's Day sales are usually great for finding discounted tools, bedding, and furniture. Department stores will also often have apparel sales in February.

MARCH

All those Valentine's day chocolates will not only be on sale, but will drop in price more drastically in March without any holidays on the horizon.

Luggage starts to go on sale in March thanks to spring break and people trying to migrate to warmer weather.

Weirdly enough, March is Frozen Foods Month, so there are supermarket coupons that help you get stocked up on frozen foods.

APRIL

Summer air travel will be cheaper when purchased in April, especially flights in June or July. Make sure to book midweek on Tuesdays or Wednesdays to get the lowest fares.

Flea market season gets going in April, but that doesn't mean the weather is cooperating. The fewer people who attend the flea markets, the more you'll be able to haggle over flea market goods.

Also, April is a good month to buy a new laptop, according to Gizmodo.

MAY

Memorial Day sales mean steep discounts on spring apparel and home goods. If you've been meaning to buy a new mattress, now's the time.

And take advantage of the warmer temps and get a gym membership. Because more people can now exercise outdoors, gyms will be more willing to waive certain fees and/or lower their prices.

JUNE

Lingerie will go on sale this month thanks to the Victoria's Secret Semi-Annual Sale (and other brands trying to compete with the gigantic retailer).

June 7 is National Doughnut Day, which means freebie giveaways from brands like Krispy Kreme and Dunkin' Donuts.

JULY

Stores will start to have summer apparel clearance sales as customers gear up for August and back-to-school shopping.

With the sweltering heat, tourists clear out of NYC. Broadway tickets at TKTS booths or online become easier (and cheaper) to get.

Mother's Day, Valentine's Day, and Christmas are all far off. Jewelers try to make up for the lull with July jewelry sales — especially online.

AUGUST

August is the ultimate for back-to-school clothes shopping, with major discounts on fall apparel.

In addition to clothes, you can expect to find good prices on backpacks, computer cases, and office supplies.

College kids will also be shopping for bed linens and towels, so a lot of department stores and places like Target, Wal-Mart and other will have sales.

And with the end of summer comes major mark downs on swimwear as stores try to make room for fall merchandise.

SEPTEMBER

End of summer means stores are selling outdoor appliances such as grills, plus patio furniture, lawnmowers, gardening supplies, and pool equipment.

Since there is so much competition at the start of fall for denim, retailers are tripping over themselves to compete.

Kitchen goods also go on sale in September as the need for wedding registries and people moving into new dorm rooms/apartments dramatically drops.

OCTOBER

New car models are often released in September, so industry experts say the best time to hit the dealerships is in October for the older models.

People rarely take vacations in October, which means you can take advantage of offseason travel prices. It's also not a bad time to go to warmer destinations where October is "peak season."

Costumes are the most discounted immediately after Halloween, but the week before Oct. 31, people can see up to 30 to 85% off (shipping, however, might be expensive).

NOVEMBER

Halloween candy goes on sale on Nov. 1, and is highly discounted. Get to stores early and stock up.

Black Friday — the day after Thanksgiving — is a major day to save. And though people should do their homework and take deals with a grain of salt, typically this is a good time to buy new appliances (like dishwashers and clothes washers/dryers), as well as general electronics (like TVs, laptops, and digital cameras).

It's also a good month to buy a wedding dress since fewer women are interested in shopping for a wedding dress during this busy holiday season.

DECEMBER

Despite New Year's Eve and holiday festivities, champagne is pretty cheap in December. This is mainly because there is such a high demand that retailers start trying to out-deal each other, so the customer wins.

Immediately after Christmas, stock up on holiday décor like tinsel and ornaments, which will be at rock-bottom prices.

Cell phones also tend to be a hot holiday gift, so buying one after Christmas will land you some good deals as retailers try to move the unsold product.

A retired man purchased a home near a high school. He spent the first few weeks of his retirement in peace, then the new school year began...

...One afternoon early into the first semester, three loud young boys came down his street, beating merrily on every bin they came across. They then did so the following day and the day after that, until finally the retiree decided it was time to take some action.

The next afternoon, he walked out to meet the boys as they banged their way down the street.

Stopping them, he said, “You kids are a lot of fun. I used to do the same thing when I was your age. Will you do me a favor? I’ll give you each a dollar if you’ll promise to come around every day and do your thing.”

The boys were more than happy and continued to bang the bins

The boys were more than happy and continued to bang the bins every day on their walk home.

After a week, the old man walked out and greeted the kids again. However this time, he didn't have a smile on his face.

"This recession's really putting a big dent in my income." he told them. "I'm going to have to cut it down to 50¢ a day to keep you kids banging the bins." The kids were obviously unimpressed but they accepted the reduction in payment and continued their afternoon activities.

A few days later, the man approached them again. "Look," he said, "I haven't received my retirement checks yet so I'm not going to be able to give you more than 25¢ to bang on the bins. Will that be okay?"

"That's it!?" the 'drum leader' exclaimed. "If you think we're going to waste our time beating these around for 25¢ a day, you're nuts! No way, mister. We quit!"

And the man enjoyed peace and serenity for the rest of his days...

The Devil sat at the gates of hell...

An old man suddenly arrived in a burst of flames, looking confused and lost. The Devil looked at his paperwork, and frowned. He was unable to find this old man's data file.

"This can't be right," the old man grumbled, looking at the Devil, "I've been a good man my whole life."

The Devil nodded apologetically, most people said this when they arrived at Hell. "Why don't you start with how you died and we'll figure it out." He said

The old man sighed and said:

"Well, I was out with minding my grandchildren, enjoying a fun day out. I don't get the grandchildren often because my eyesight is starting to fade. But we were having the most wonderful time..

And that's when everything went crazy!

Out of nowhere, I spotted the largest most grotesque mouse I've ever seen moving towards us. It was absolutely enormous!

And that's when it moved. Straight towards the grandchildren first, limbs outstretched. You don't know where mice have been, what if it had've bitten one of them? Can you imagine if they got rabies on my watch?"

"So what did you do?" The Devil whispered, entranced by the story. He was munching on a box of popcorn.

“You don’t get how big this mouse was! Radiation it must’ve been. Too many phones these days, that’s what causes it.

I did the only think I could!

I grabbed my walking stick and I cracked it over the head. Now my eye sight isn’t that good anymore, but I whacked it good!

The kids started screaming at this point. You know how they get when you have to kill an animal.

But I needed to keep going. You see with mice, you need to see their guts to know they’re dead. Otherwise they’ll be back with others.”

“So you killed it?” The Devil asked. Some of his demigods had come to listen to the story.

The old man nodded,

“By golly I did! Guts and all were splattered for all to see. The kids had lost their mind at this point. Tears everywhere. A crowd had gathered as well, all screaming at the sight.

It was at this point though, that the exertion caught up with me. I felt my heart give way. I must have suffered a heart attack. Next thing I know, I’m here.”

“Well,” the Devil said, concerned, “This doesn’t seem to add up. Let me just give Heaven a call and we’ll try and see what’s going on here.

The Devil pulled up a phone from thin air and dialled a number.

“Hey Jesus bro,” the Devil said, “I think I’ve got one of yours here. His story checks out. Must have been a mix up.”

The Devil nodded as a voice on the phone spoke back to him. He gave the old man a silent celebratory thumbs up as the voice continued.

The Devil covered the phone speaker with his hand, turned to the old man and said,

“You’re all good, they just want to know where you were when you died.”

The old man nodded,

“Oh that’s easy, I was at Disneyland.”

But Stevenson isn't so sure that we should be looking at Disney princesses to push the envelope forward. "I think focusing all our energy solely on big corporations for representation isn't necessarily the best use of our time," she says. "There are good people working at those studios, and they're the ones working hard and sticking their necks out to include LGBT representation in the projects that they're a part of, and I'm very grateful for those people and that is very important work."

But change, she says, will only come when people at the top take the risk of alienating conservative or international audiences—and she's not holding her breath. "I think our time is better spent focusing on media that gives queer creators the platform to tell their own stories in meaningful ways and proving that there is an audience and excitement for those projects instead of assuming representation is only meaningful if it comes from a major studio."

So Biden's $15 minimum wage comes out to $31,200 a year for a 40 hour work week. The starting salary for a beginning teacher in Texas is $33,660. So a person working a minimum wage job will be making almost the same as a teacher with a college degree. Does this make any sense? 🤷‍♂️

Here's the truth. Minimum wage going up to $15 an hour is making folks realize how UNDERPAID they are in their salaried positions. And instead of railing against their salaries being too low, they are railing against the $15 being too high. Fight for yours, not against theirs ✊

national-shitpost-registry Follow

Keep in mind that raising minimum wage will ultimately force your employer to pay you more competitively--whether or not you are a minimum wage worker.

This is why conservatives are so scared of minimum wage workers making a living wage (which, to be clear, $15/hour is not)--it would force all employers to start paying employees a more reasonable fraction of their value. Trickle-down economics is a sick joke, but trickle-up economics is real.

Raise the standard for the lowest paid workers, and THE STANDARD GETS RAISED FOR EVERYONE.

Whether you make $30k or $100k a year, you are making pennies on the dollar of what you are actually earning your employer. Never forget that.

another absolutely fantastic trope is when a scifi/fantasy character calls the oblivious object of their affections a term of endearment in their fictional first language during an emotional moment which they refuse to translate, and their love interest assumes due to the unresolved sexual tension fuelled rivalry aspect of their relationship that it's an insult, only to have their world absolutely rocked to its core when they finally manage to get a translation and realize that the other person has been pining for them the entire goddamn time

If somebody brags that they went to Harvard that's not super impressive actually. Yeah it's hard to get in but once you're in it's difficult to fail. Ivy League schools don't have over 90% graduation rates because all the students there are smart. They have over 90% graduation rates because it's actually difficult to fail out.

You get a pretty similar education at state colleges. Yeah a state college won't have the name recognition of an ivy league but if all you care about is getting a degree and actually learning stuff then a state school is perfectly fine and generally much cheaper than private colleges.

bookedforevermore Follow

that is absolutely right!!

the amount of that i've gotten - that my career as a scientist won't mean much because im at a state college is astounding. but now i've come to the conclusion (after long conversations with my advisor who did go to an ivy) that regardless of where you go, it's about the people you surround yourself with. college is about learning and discovery (for me) and this rat race for the ivy leagues is really... unsubstantiated, once you think about what's important

We explore how the Brothers Grimm helped foster the German national spirit, from their famed folk tales to their work in...

WWW.BABBEL.COM | LESSON NINE GMBH

“Most of us are familiar with the folk tales of the Brothers Grimm, from Sleeping Beauty to Cinderella and all our childhood favorites in between. But to appreciate the full legacy of Jakob and Wilhelm Grimm, you need to look beyond their famous fairy tales. You have to understanding the political and social context of the time and place they were living, and how their love for the German people — and those people’s language — shaped a lifelong dedication to their craft.

In this episode of Multilinguish, we dive deep into the work of the Brothers Grimm, taking a look at their world-recognized collection of fairy tales, their professional careers as linguists and language scholars and how these threads were tangled in with one another. We examine some of their most consequential projects to get a sense of just how wide their interests and passions extended.

Multilinguish: The Brothers Grimm, Between The Lines

In the first part of the episode, content producers David Doochin and Thomas Devlin discuss the historical context playing into the growth of the German cultural and national spirit, or Volksgeist, and explore how the Grimms’ fairy tales tied into that spirit. Their colleague in Berlin, Karina Indytska, reads a few passages from some of the Grimms’ tales, translated from their original versions to give a sense of the stories in their un-”Disneyfied” forms.

After the break, Thomas and David dive into the work of the Grimms from a linguistic perspective, focusing on how they sought to elevate the German language in the people's consciousness by documenting and analyzing it in a way that had never been done before. They discuss some important projects undertaken by the brothers around Germanic linguistics, highlighting the intentions behind them and the impacts they had both at the time and long into the future."

If it's not in a written contract nor was it ever a requirement in the job, you don't have to give a a two week noticed ESPECIALLY if the job in question is super toxic.

Yes giving a two week notice is polite and considerate, but really most employers are lucky to get any notice let alone a two week one so

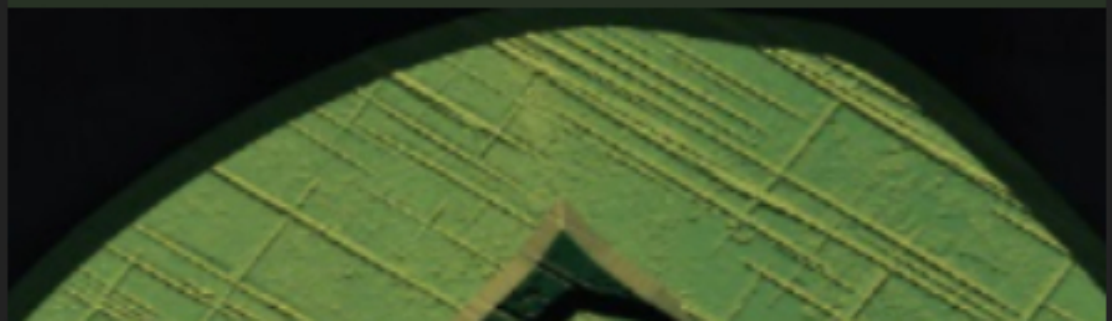
Anonymous asked:

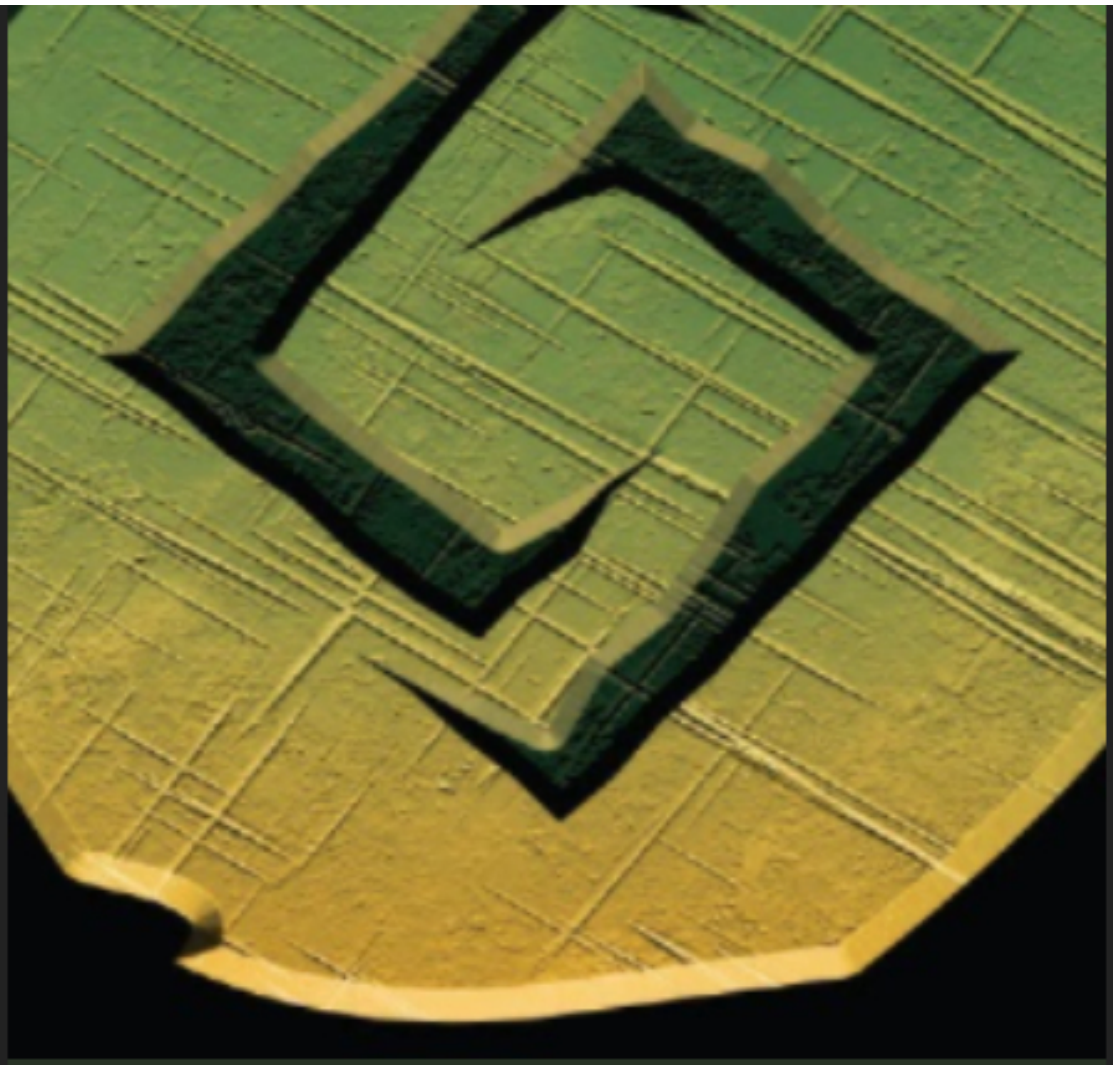
Do we know if the symbol on comic Loki's horns/hemet-ette thing mean anything? Or is he just a huge fan of square brackets?

worstloki answered:

It resembles a Jera rune and @lucianalight points out that it could be two Kenaz runes here although he could just be a fan of pointed designs I guess.

The one used in more recent comics for Loki looks like this:





and is used as a symbol for Jotunheim, although I'm pretty sure that only started appearing on his helmet after the War of the Realms and denotes his title as King of Jotunheim.

I didn't know it is a symbol of Jotunheim and Loki wears it to show that he is the king of Jotunheim. But now I think it makes sense that it is in fact the Jera rune because "Jotenheim" starts with this rune. I also find it interesting that Jera resembles two intertwined Kenaz runes. So Loki can show both his rune, and his title's rune with only one.

Jera represents change. Which is a good symbol for Loki in the current stage of his arc in comics.

> Rune of harvest and reward for, or reaction to, right actions in a horizontal (naturally ordered) cyclical process. Rune of peace on the land and in the heart.

> Peace, prosperity and plenty
> Realization of the cyclical nature of the multiverse, invoking the power of time and cycles
> Bringing other concepts gently into material manifestation
> Initiating gradual and lasting change in flow of life
> *"Jera is has an unstoppable energy, gradual but unrelenting, unhurried but persistent, indifferent to human influence. Nature has a way of persistently marching on. This has gone way too far now. Even your apology you continued to make fun of me. Before today my twitter account was highly regarded as a beacon of truth with some hard hitting opinions. Today you've completely ruined it and turned me into a fruit meme. I asked for you to apologise and you couldn't even do that. If you don't start showing some respect and stop making me a lemon meme I'll be contacting my lawyer to see if I have grounds to sue on defamation of character as you've ruined my accounts rep.

#13 - Death

One of the most misunderstood cards in a Tarot deck, Death is not a card about physical death. The Death card speaks of cycles -- endings, yes, but beginnings too -- and is a reminder that all things must pass. Hanging on to relationships, feelings, fears, or situations from the past will hinder you from allowing new, better things to enter your life. Take comfort in knowing that in every ending lies a chance for a new beginning. Learn more about the Death card »

#16 - The Tower

Perhaps the most dreaded card in a Tarot deck, The Tower is a representation of destruction. The Tower often comes up when everything in your life feels like its crumbling, and you have no way of stopping it. The message of this card is to just let it fall. The weakest parts of your life must be torn down in order to build something strong and sturdy in their place -- something that can last a lifetime. Learn more about The Tower card »

The social cheat I've learned for this is to say:

"I have to check my calendar, why, what's Friday?"

This says "Maybe" without saying "Maybe", and giving you the option to make up a Doctor's Appointment You Forgot About (or reschedule one you didn't!) depending on what they say.

It's an amazingly powerful sentence for my Autistic and ADHD ass - it gives me the ability to judge my social spoons, as well as communicating that "hey, I might have forgotten something, it's not you it's me" in a very non-offensive way.

During a military campaign, Vlad the Impaler, the basis for Dracula, once pulled his troops out of a major engagement in a valley at dusk so that the sun was in their enemies’ eyes. Once they were over the hill, they set loose a bunch of rabid bats who flew away from the sun (towards the enemy) and attacked them, leading to significant infection in their ranks, and Vlad’s eventual victory. Because of how the bats appeared from where Vlad’s soldiers appeared to be at dusk, myth stated that the soldiers turned into bats at night, which is where the “Dracula can change into a bat” thing came from.

King James (the one known for revising the Bible) liked to watch women give birth. That's where the "tradition" of women laying on their backs to give birth comes from.

Previous to that it was common for women to have chairs with holes in them and straw underneath, so they could sit on this special chair and let gravity help with the birthing process.

Jack Churchill, known as Mad Jack, was a British Officer during WW2. He loved hunting nazis, playing the bagpipes, and archery. He loved them so much that he did them all at the same time.

Churchill killed a nazi with a long bow in battle as well. Maybe his gun jammed, but more likely he did it because when you're a badass you do badass shit.

He was captured multiple times and tossed in concentration camps. He escaped everytime. One of his escapes wasn't so much an escape as just an exit. He just walked on out of there. Who the fuck going to stop him after all.

He snuck out off base one night in Italy with his claymore sword because I guess he couldn't sleep and figured capturing 42 nazi officers with only his sword would be a good way to overcome insomnia. So he did that.

He so loved his sword that he is famous for saying no soldier is properly dressed for battle without one.

She was then tortured by locking her in a chamber filled with rats and snakes. No really, please reblog this if you can, because this site in general, but fandom spaces especially bad for this, to the point where people are genuinely afraid of harassment they may face for saying ‘Pedophilia is a bad thing and you probably should not encourage it’ or for calling it what it is. Fandom spaces are also especially bad for screaming about how it’s ‘just fiction’ when we know damn well that fiction impacts reality.

Marjorie Taylor-Greene's anti-Semitism is as American as apple pie (but Trump made it worse)

by Matthew Rozsa

I was a 12 years old when I was attacked by a mob of children and called "Christ killer" — the same age Jesus was, according to the Gospel of Luke, when he lingered in the Temple of Jerusalem and impressed the elders with his intellect — so this issue is undeniably personal. That wasn't the first or last time I was bullied for being Jewish, but it was the only time I nearly died because of it: Those kids held my head underwater, chanting, "Drown the Jew!"

This incident sprang back to mind this month as Republicans tried to figure out what to do about Greene, a particularly obnoxious Christian right-winger who has suggested that a "space laser" affiliated with Jewish banking families caused the 2018 Camp Fire in California, expressed sympathy for the anti-Semitic QAnon fantasies, promoted a video that claimed Jews are trying to destroy Europe, posed for a picture with a Ku Klux Klan leader and liked a tweet linking Israel to the assassination of John F. Kennedy.

None of this is surprising for anyone who is familiar with the history of American anti-Semitism. Greene is not an aberration, some inexplicable pimple of hatred that blemishes the American right's otherwise Jew-friendly visage. The American right has long had an anti-Semitism problem, and she's just the latest symptom.

This history of hatred "tells us much more about the anti-Semite than it tells us about Jews," Dr. Jonathan Sarna, a professor of American Jewish history at Brandeis University, told Salon. After citing an Israeli historian who refers to anti-Semitism as a "cultural code," Sarna explained that beliefs that vilify Jews as malevolent plotters who secretly control the world have a long history in American political life. "These ideas, which I think many on the left frankly had thought were done and over with, we suddenly see them full blown," he said.

Before the 19th century, Sarna explained Jews were stereotypically depicted as being cursed: They were "wandering Jews" for their supposed role in killing Jesus Christ. In the modern era, however, the stereotype emerged that Jews secretly controlled the world and were responsible for everything that a given anti-Semite might regard as sinister. During the Civil War, Gen. Ulysses S. Grant blamed the Jews for cotton smuggling and expelled the entire Jewish community from areas he controlled in Kentucky, Tennessee and Mississippi. When the populist movement arose to address agrarian economic concerns in the 1890s, Jewish bankers like the Rothschilds were a frequent target among ideological leaders like William Hope "Coin" Harvey.

There's a direct line between those conspiratorial fantasies ideas from previous decades and the anti-Semitic attacks of the 21st century. "Conspiratorial thinking, by its nature, argues that everything is connected," Sarna explained. "There are no coincidences and it eschews complexity. It believes there are simple explanations based on sinister individuals who are manipulating the universe. Unsurprisingly, in a Christian setting, those are Jews."

Those ideas can evolve — Sarna pointed out that the QAnon belief in a giant child abuse ring run by Jews is analogous to the "blood libel," the medieval myth that Jews used the blood of Christian children for rituals — but the underlying assumptions have been consistent. It just so happens that, in the modern right-wing incarnation, Donald Trump's cult-like following believes that "all the enemies of Mr. Trump are now child molesters."

[Jewish comedian Larry Charles] brought up community organizer and political theorist Saul Alinsky, a favorite target of the right. "He is and political theorist Saul Alinsky, a favorite target of the right. "He is almost like the devil in a way," Charles observed. "He's like this radical leftist Jew, he fits all the categories. He checks all the boxes."

"Shooting some of these movies, we would see reasonable people who have this blind spot," Charles said. "They have this crazy belief, and there were all different applications and manifestations of it, that the Jews control everything. That is like a mantra amongst a certain segment of the population."

With the election of Trump in 2016, those ingrained belief systems — which for many years had been kept outside the American political mainstream — became more prominent, and their adherents more emboldened. David Weissman, a military veteran and former conservative Republican who stopped being a self-described "Trump troll" after a 2018 conversation with comedian Sarah Silverman, told Salon about his encounters with anti-Semitism on the right.

Back when he still supported Trump, Weissman recalled, he got into a "little spat" with an alt-right commentator who calls himself Baked Alaska, who was recently arrested after the Jan. 6 Capitol riot. Ultimately they moved past it, Weissman said: "We both realized we were Trump supporters" who believed "Democrats were the bad guys." Once he left MAGA world, however, Weissman said "the anti-Semitism definitely escalated" in interactions with his former allies.

"When I became a Democrat, I was called 'the k-word'" and targeted by "anti-Semitic slurs and tropes," Weissman said. Trump supporters sent "memes of me being Jewish in the oven," and "put my name in parentheses," a common tactic used by the far right to target someone for being Jewish.

"Anti-Semitism certainly did not start with Marjorie Taylor Greene, nor did it start with Donald Trump, but we have seen an exponential increase in violent anti-Semitic incidents during Donald Trump's presidency," Halie Soifer, CEO of the Jewish Democratic Council of America, told Salon. "That is no doubt related to the fact that he emboldened and aligned himself with white nationalism." She mentioned Trump equating the neo-Nazis in Charlottesville with the peaceful protesters by "commenting that there were very fine people on both sides," refusing to denounce white nationalism and telling the right-wing Proud Boys during one of the campaign debates to "stand back and stand by."

"White nationalism had existed in our country prior to that, and anti-Semitism as an element of it, but white nationalists had never had an ally in the White House until Donald Trump," Soifer said.

Donald Trump's supposed pro-Israel policies were closely aligned with those of Benjamin Netanyahu, and did nothing to correct for Trump's history of anti-Semitic words and actions. He accused Jewish Democrats of "great disloyalty" toward Israel (feeding into the stereotype that Jews have dual loyalties), removed any specific reference to Jews from a 2017 State Department statement on Holocaust Remembrance Day and has frequently used anti-Semitic dogwhistle terms by opposing "globalists" and describing himself as a "nationalist." When I interviewed Charlotte Pence, the daughter of former Vice President Mike Pence, she talked about her family's love of Israel but refused to answer a question about whether she believes Jews are going to hell — or discuss the creepy messianic theories underpinning the Christian right's support for Israel.

When I asked Larry Charles whether, based on his experiences, there's an opportunity to build bridges with anti-Semites, he was skeptical. “I have not seen a lot of opportunities for bridge building in the situations that I’ve been in,” Charles explained. “The people that I’ve met through Sacha [Baron Cohen] were very rigid and dogmatic in their prejudices. There was no crossing that gulf with them. There might be tolerance, temporarily. There might be patience, temporarily. But there’s no changing that belief.”

I hope that Charles is wrong but suspect he is right, which raises the question of how American Jews should react to the Marjorie Taylor Greenes of the world. For want of a better alternative, I think the only solution is to be intolerant toward intolerance. House Democrats were right to strip Greene of her committee assignments, but that is not nearly enough. Social media platforms like Facebook and Twitter need to do more to limit hate speech, even if conservatives cry foul in bad faith (the First Amendment only protects people from government censorship, not consequences from private corporations). Right-wing politicians who attack prominent Jews in ways that can be plausibly construed as anti-Semitic, or by denouncing “globalists,” need to lose their funding. People who oppose anti-Semitism must lead boycotts against right-wing media figures who cover for people like Greene, such as Fox News’ Sean Hannity.

On a broader level, critics of anti-Semitism must recognize that this form of bigotry is part of America’s long history of hate — a history which holds that only white, straight Christian “manly” men have a right to rule — and recognize our responsibility to be allies to African Americans and the Latinx community, Muslims and the LGBT community, women suffering under the patriarchy and the poor struggling to make ends meet. If we limit our empathy merely to other Jews, the implicit message is not that systemic oppression is wrong, but only that we happen to dislike it when our group is targeted. The Jewish tradition at its best instills a moral responsibility to see all the layers of oppression, and align ourselves with its victims.

I’d love to see a version of Julius Caesar where he takes the beware the Ides of March warning seriously like “oh shit. good heads up man thanks” and he goes into it with his own knife. He calms down a bit when he see’s all his best friends like “yea, the squad is here and everyone is strapped. nice”

AU where Bella doesn't TELL Edward that she knows, she just strolls into lunch one day and goes "hey guys, I've got a question for the table. Just for funsies, you know, just totally off the top of my head. Would you fuck a vampire, yes or no? I vote Yes." And then stares across the cafeteria without blinking while Edward chokes.

This is my favourite because if you think about Jessica as a character she would 100% be in for that conversation and would start the pros and cons list making it a conversation that ends up including everyone and lasts for like days.

character concept: the best trick archer in the world, the trick to which is that he's actually not an archer at all, he's a speedster and he can't aim for shit, every time he takes a shot he actually just grabs the arrow, runs over to what he wants to stick, then runs back before anyone can see him move

he's on a team with Heat Vision Man, who actually has no heat vision and is another speedster, he just glares at people then runs over and punches them and is back before they can see him move anyone remember that one post about makeup where the OP was talking about how it was seen as a requirement and all these people kept adding on "well you actually only need very light makeup" and the OP had to keep saying "you are completely missing the point of this post"?

men feel bad" or "it gives shitty men an excuse for their behavior"
